Dear Fellow Missourian:

It is with heartfelt gratitude to Missouri's classroom teachers-past, present, and future-that I dedicate this, the 64th edition of the Official Manual, State of Missouri. In dedicating this volume to our teachers, it is my hope that we will reflect on the contributions they continue to make to the growth and development of our citizenry and consider more deeply the fundamental role of teachers in preparing our children and shaping Missouri's future.

This office has given focused attention to reducing the cost of printing the Official Manual, which is required by statute to be published biennially. The 2003-2004 edition is the second consecutive Blue Book to cost less than its predecessor. The last manual, printed in 2001-2002, cost approximately five percent less per copy than its 1999-2000 predecessor. In this edition, my second as Secretary of State, we have again reduced the cost of producing the Blue Book as this Official Manual will cost eighteen percent less than its 2001-2002 counterpart, which is $102,086 less than the 1999-2000 edition. These savings of your tax dollars have been attained through the aggressive utilization of emerging technologies, planning, and attention to detail.

This edition features the people of Missouri and our state's natural beauty in a special photographic presentation entitled, My Missouri: Photos that Define the Show-Me State. In it, photographers have captured the unique faces and places of Missouri with brilliance, professionalism and affection. I expect their work will bring enjoyment to Missourians and elicit a greater sense of pride in the people, history, and landscapes that so enduringly define our wonderful state.

Washington University Professor Peter Kastor has written the feature article for the Manual highlighting Missouri in the age of Lewis and Clark. Missouri marked the starting point of the Voyage of Discovery, and thus our state will play an instrumental role in celebrating the bicentennial of this epic adventure.

It is a great honor to serve you as your Secretary of State. I hope this edition of the Blue Book will help convey to all the greatness and the goodness that so aptly characterizes Missouri and her people.

Missouri's Teachers Past, Present and Future

When a senior in a Missouri high school enrolled in a humanities course, it was to fulfill a graduation requirement. During the semester, the student discovered what would become a lifelong interest in the impact of the arts on our history. For the next semester, he enrolled in a second humanities course with the same teacher.

The history of art had no practical relevance to the young person's plan for a career in the armed forces. Lacking artistic or musical ability, he would never support himself as an artist. I was that student, of course. I will never forget that teacher's ability to inspire an appreciation for our cultural past.

Like millions of Missourians, my teachers changed my life. It is with deep gratitude to Missouri's teachers, past, present, and future, that I dedicate this edition of the Official Manual.

St. Louis Public Schools Record Center and Archives

Teachers are the extraordinary citizens whose life's work is to awaken in young people the love of knowledge and prepare them for success in the world. "A teacher affects eternity; he can never tell where his influence stops," said historian Henry Adams. So it has been in Missouri. Educators have shaped our state's life from the earliest days of settlement. Our schools have always been a source of strength, a pathway to betterment, and a point of community pride in rural areas, small towns, and cities. Beyond their tremendous contributions to our state, Missouri teachers have influenced people and events in this and other nations.

Susan Elizabeth Blow, who opened the nation's first public kindergarten in St. Louis, in the 1870s, transformed early childhood education. Her friend and mentor, William Torrey Harris, was a philosopher and educator who served as Superintendent of St. Louis Public Schools and U.S. Commissioner of Education.

The compassion of the teacher was epitomized by St. Rose Philippine Duchesne. She founded schools in territorial Missouri for the children of American and French settlers and opened a boarding school for Native American girls. She gave her life to educating and helping those in need, and was canonized by Pope John Paul II in 1988.

Phoebe Apperson Hearst, the mother of publisher William Randolph Hearst, was a teacher and advocate of improvements in education. In 1897, she founded the National Congress of Mothers, which became the Parent Teachers Association in 1924.

John Berry Meachum, an African-American clergyman and educator, conducted the earliest known school for black adults and children in antebellum St. Louis. His student, James Milton Turner, the pre-eminent leader of black Missourians after the Civil War, taught in Kansas City and Boonville. Nathaniel C. Bruce established an agricultural school for African-Americans in 1907 near Dalton, in Chariton County. It eventually became known as the Dalton Vocational School.

George Washington Carver, one of America's most illustrious scientists, was born in our state. The renowned African-American educator was a research scientist and teacher at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. Laura Ingalls Wilder taught before moving to Missouri. She wrote her beloved Little House books about growing up on the American frontier at her home in Mansfield. General John J. Pershing, the commander of American forces in World War I, taught school in Missouri before entering West Point.

There is no proper end to the roster of illustrious Missouri educators, and noted Missourians who also taught. After mothers and fathers, it is often teachers who have the greatest influence on our lives.

On behalf of all Missourians, I am honored to express our gratitude, respect, and esteem to the teachers who shaped our state, who are today imparting knowledge to the young, and who will help create a future of opportunity for all our children.

Acknowledgements:

I extend my sincere gratitude to the Publications staff; Julie Stegeman, Bernie Otke, Claire Brown, Charlotte Meek, and Michael Douglas-Llyr, it is an honor to work with such a dedicated group of people. It is truly a monumental task to research, compile, design and typeset a book such as the Official Manual.

Additionally, I would like to recognize the many individuals from within state government and several private organizations for providing research assistance and updated material for publication in this edition.

On behalf of Secretary of State Matt Blunt and myself, please accept our deepest appreciation.

Making Missouri American:

A Crowded Frontier in the Age of Lewis and Clark

Peter J. Kastor

(State Historical Society of Missouri, Columbia)

Meriwether Lewis reached Missouri in 1808 ready to take charge. His goal was simple but hardly easy: to build a society on a frontier that seemed distant, detached, and disorganized from the rest of the United States. To realize this vision, Lewis planned nothing less than a transformation of the local economy, government, and military institutions.

Lewis should have known better. People throughout North America had their own goals when it came to the place that became Missouri. And Lewis, he had spent the winter of 1803–1804 in St. Louis and in western Illinois, during which he observed the entrenched cultural traditions of western residents. From 1804–1806, he had led an expedition that he called the "Corps of Discovery" across the North American West, during which he met people who were themselves interested in Missouri, even from great distances. No sooner did Meriwether Lewis set to work in 1808 than he faced challenges that exceeded his abilities. The very solutions he proposed would actually be his undoing. His close friend and colleague, William Clark, watched the self-destruction that followed with sadness and occasional disbelief. But Clark was busy as well, pursuing many of the same tasks—building a government, fostering prosperity, establishing stability—that so overwhelmed Lewis.

As far as Lewis and Clark were concerned, the primary task in Missouri was to establish American sovereignty in a place that had only recently become American. But the difficulties they faced revealed a quandary: what was Missouri? That was no abstract question at the turn of the nineteenth century. People throughout North America were paying attention to the place that became Missouri. Their attention eventually brought Lewis and Clark to Missouri and helps explain their experiences.

Yet if Missouri is crucial to understanding Lewis and Clark, their own lives are no less important for understanding Missouri. So at the bicentennial of the Lewis and Clark Expedition, it is particularly appropriate to consider their lives in Missouri. For Lewis, it was a dispiriting period that finally led to his downfall. For Clark, Missouri became a home, the center of public and domestic successes that lasted far longer than the Expedition.

Lewis and Clark also help explain a particular aspect of life in Missouri. They provide a way to make sense of the government that took form in Missouri, and that government is the focus of this essay. While Missouri was the home to rich, evolving forms of culture that reflected the tremendous diversity of its population, the story of government in Missouri in the age of Lewis and Clark constitutes a particularly appropriate way to begin the state's official manual, a book which, after all, explains that government in its contemporary form.

(State Historical Society of Missouri, Columbia)

And the challenges of government two centuries ago may seem quite familiar today. Public officials faced numerous demands with limited resources. The energies of a healthy democracy created a government accountable to its electorate, but also forced officials at all level to navigate potentially explosive political situations. Local officials had to find ways of working with the federal government, a task that remains today but one that was all the more puzzling at a time when the Constitution itself was still a new document. Finally, local residents had their own opinions and expressed them in ways that upset and even frightened public officials, because those opinions seemed likely to upset vital objectives of public policy.

Yet for all those similarities, two centuries ago people faced the bigger question of defining Missouri. The lives of Lewis and Clark straddled four distinct visions of Missouri exemplified by four different terms that people used to define the region: Upper Louisiana, the Louisiana Territory, the Missouri Territory, and the State of Missouri. Lewis and Clark were at the vanguard of the federal government's efforts to establish its sovereignty in the West. Lewis died in the middle of this process, but Clark remained, motivated by many of the same concerns that had shaped Lewis' public life. By the time Congress created the State of Missouri with boundaries similar to those which still exist today, those boundaries seemed to be the logical reflection of the world that Lewis and Clark had helped to create. By 1821 people believed there was, in fact, a place called "Missouri." But creating Missouri required a transformation in population, in government, and in culture. It meant changing a place that had seemed like the intersection of numerous places into something unquestionably American.

Upper Louisiana

In 1800, nobody was talking about Missouri. But that does not mean they were not interested in the place that became Missouri. The people who lived there were, of course, deeply invested in the place they called home. Meanwhile, four Virginians—Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, Meriwether Lewis, and William Clark—were eyeing the region as well. Although Jefferson and Madison chose different career paths from Lewis and Clark, all four men found their lives shaped by the same political upheavals, international war, and local conflicts between frontier residents that defined life in Missouri. But they did not use the word "Missouri." Instead, people used a variety of terms to describe a place that seemed incredibly important but which seemed to defy a single definition. By the late eighteenth century, what became the State of Missouri was the center of a European colony called Upper Louisiana. Even that name was more of a European aspiration than a reality. The place that became Missouri was a crossroads of places with different names and different residents.

As all these people conceived of the place they called home, various terms came to mind. And those many terms are the key to understanding how people thought about the place that eventually became "Missouri." In the simplest terms, there was no place called Missouri in 1800. There was a Missouri River, of course, and people followed activities on the river with great interest. The river took its name from Indians who the French called "Missouri," but their numbers had been decimated by European disease and local warfare. The area where the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers met seemed to be the fringe of other places rather than a clear place unto itself. To the north was the Great Lakes region, occupied by numerous Indian villages and the site of vigorous trade between Europeans and Indians. To the east was the Illinois Country, the site of far greater French settlement than the lands west of the Mississippi. To the west of the Illinois Country there was a place that Europeans referred to as Indian Country. Well beyond European control or much of a European presence, the land from the eastern Plains to the Pacific was the site of Indian villages and complex Indian relations.

By 1800, the most powerful people in what became the State of Missouri were the Osage Indians. Europeans often referred to the "Great and Little Osage," but these titles belied the fact that most Indians lived in a decentralized village system that extended from the Mississippi Valley to the eastern Plains to the Ozark Mountains. The Osage might be powerful, but they were hardly alone. Indians from the northwest were regular arrivals. Descending the Missouri River from the Central and Northern Plains, they sought their own commercial opportunities in the Lower Missouri Valley. As warfare ravaged the Great Lakes region, the Sauc and Fox Indians of Wisconsin eventually moved to the area that now constitutes northwestern Missouri and southern Iowa. And on the eastern fringes of this region, a growing number of people with European ancestry began to arrive. The largest number of those newcomers were of French decent. Those born in America called themselves Creole, and while Creoles eventually became the largest number of French speaking—or "Francophone"—settlers, they were hardly the entire population. Other Francophone migrants came from Canada, the Caribbean, or France itself. And as the number of Europeans increased, so too did the number of people with mixed European and Indian ancestry, often called métis.

All of these places overlapped in an area that eventually became the State of Missouri. It was typical of the frontiers in North America, a place without clear boundaries or clear forms of power.

The number of Europeans remained small because few Europeans were interested in the region. The place that became Missouri was part of the larger French colony of Louisiana. In real terms, French power was limited to Lower Louisiana, the area immediately surrounding the burgeoning town of New Orleans and the nearby settlements. The rest of France's possessions in Upper Louisiana, including what became Missouri, remained an area of limited control and even less concern. By the mid-eighteenth century, however, a number of French officials and French entrepreneurs were making the case that Upper Louisiana could create commercial opportunities while reinforcing French security against potential threats from Spanish colonies to the south, British colonies to the east, and Indian villages in every direction.

The solution for all concerned was to create a town. That town was St. Louis, and it started in 1764 as a small trading and administrative outpost easily overshadowed by the larger downriver village of Ste. Genevieve. The men who founded St. Louis are useful examples of the sort of Europeans who came to the intersection of Indian Country and the Illinois Country. Gilbert Antoine Maxent, who organized and helped finance the project, was a Creole. But Pierre Laclède was originally from France. Laclede brought with him a teenager named Auguste Chouteau, who he treated as a stepson since meeting him in New Orleans, Chouteau's birthplace and Laclède's first home in America. They envisioned St. Louis as a trading outpost, and focused their energies on creating commercial contacts throughout the Illinois Country and up the Missouri River.

(Missouri Historical Society, St. Louis)

But they would not do so under the French. If 1764 marked the beginning of St. Louis, it marked the end of French rule. France had already lost its Canadian holdings to Great Britain during the Seven Year's War, and at the conclusion of that conflict in 1763, France ceded Louisiana to Spain. News did not arrive until after French officials approved the creation of St. Louis, and the Spanish themselves waited several years before sending officials to take charge. Even when the Spanish did arrive, their impact was limited. The small settlements of the mid-Mississippi Valley required few public officials, nor did the Spanish launch any substantive efforts to attract Spanish settlers. They actually found their greatest success in the United States, where a growing number of Americans from Kentucky decided to try their fortunes in Spanish Upper Louisiana.

So by the end of the eighteenth century, the European settlements on the western banks of the Mississippi shared much of their culture with the more populous Illinois Country to the East. Most people spoke French, observed Roman Catholicism, maintained connections to the French and Indian worlds of the North American interior, and did their best to deal with the strangers who governed them. In the Illinois Country, that meant the United States, which had secured its control over the Old Northwest during the American Revolution. In Upper Louisiana, that meant the Spanish, who were willing to let the settlers—most of them French in their ancestry and customs—go about their business so long as they did not threaten the stability or the security of the Spanish empire.

Under this arrangement, the French and Spanish settlements remained rough and tumble frontier outposts that attracted only the most hardy—or foolhardy—settlers. That does not mean others outside the region did not care. To the contrary, the region was an area of great interest to observers in other parts of the world.

By 1800, two Virginians in particular were paying very close attention to the eastern fringes of Louisiana. Thomas Jefferson and James Madison situated Louisiana within a broader understanding of the West that would come to define their vision of America's future. The two men came from neighboring counties, and in the tumult of the American Revolution built a close friendship as well as political alliance that lasted for the rest of their lives. That relationship rested on a shared vision of the threats as well as the opportunities facing the republican experiment in America. As early as 1781, Jefferson concluded that "the Missisipi will be one of the principal channels of future commerce." And in 1784 Madison gave an indication of just how dangerous foreign control of the Mississippi could be. After a season of record produce on western farms, he informed Jefferson that "nothing can delay such a revolution with regd. to our staple, but an impolitic & perverse attempt in Spain to shut the mouth of the Miss[issipp]i. agst. the trade of the inhab[itant]s."

Jefferson and Madison believed that the trade in American goods down the Mississippi River and access to the fur trade up the Missouri River would be vital to the survival of their struggling young republic. But Jefferson also had grander visions. An amateur scientist of considerable talent, Jefferson was fascinated with the North American West. He had already launched several unsuccessful efforts to conduct an American expedition into the North American West, and he eagerly consumed the published accounts of European explorers.

Jefferson and Madison brought their concerns with them to Washington in 1801, when Jefferson took office as president and immediately selected Madison as his secretary of state. In Madison, Jefferson had a trusted colleague who shared many of his experiences. But Jefferson was equally eager to cultivate a younger generation of talented young man who would inherit positions of authority from the founding generation. And in his personal secretary, Meriwether Lewis, Jefferson believed he had an ideal candidate.

Lewis was intelligent, committed to the federal union, loyal to the Jeffersonian Republicans, and a Virginian. The last of these qualifications now seems the most troubling, for it suggests some form of corrupt favoritism for Jefferson's home state. At the time, however, it made perfect sense. Jefferson doubted the political sensibilities in other states. He also was most comfortable selecting people who were known to him personally or who he could vet through family connections.

Jefferson first broached the subject of a western expedition with Lewis in 1802. As Jefferson and Lewis set about planning this expedition, Jefferson returned to the question that had intrigued so many before him. What was the place across the Mississippi? He had limited information to use. In 1795, British cartographer Aaron Arrowsmith had released the latest word on North American geography. His map reflected just how little Europeans or Anglo-Americans actually knew about the place that became Missouri.

In some ways, Arrowsmith got it right. The Missouri he portrayed was a place dominated by rivers and by Indians. Even his lettering reflected the realities of power in the region. While he used big letters to mark of the United States and Louisiana, when it came to the intersection of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, there were no European or American names. Instead, "Missouris" and "Pawnees" dominate the landscape. Likewise, the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers dominate the natural landscape. This was partly the result of ignorance. Without detailed knowledge of the waterways beyond the Mississippi Valley, Arrowsmith left the landscape blank, in comparison with the intricate network of rivers he drew east of the Mississippi. But if Arrowsmith's map reflected the extent of his knowledge, he unintentionally provided a highly accurate representation of the way people interacted with their environment. As far as most residents of the region were concerned, the Mississippi and the Missouri were the only rivers that mattered.

Arrowsmith's map served as a template for Lewis as well as a challenge. Jefferson wanted Lewis to fill in the gaps. He wanted a record of the land west of the Mississippi that would match Arrowsmith's detail for the East. Plans for the expedition continued. Among Lewis' first decisions was selecting William Clark to lead the expedition with him. The friendship that emerged between the men is the stuff of legend. So, too, is their collaborative leadership style. Nothing reflected their personal and professional relationships better than the issue of military rank. In 1803 the War Department only allowed Clark to re-enter the Army as a first lieutenant despite promises of a captain's commission. Lewis ignored this state of affairs and immediately called Clark his "co-captain" rather than reserve command for himself. Meanwhile, Clark never resented Lewis' higher official rank despite the fact that Clark was older than Lewis and had, in fact, been Lewis' commander during the 1790s.

A matter of less common knowledge is the degree to which both Lewis and Clark reflected Jefferson's vision of good public servants as well as the social profile of the men serving as officers in the United States Army. Lewis and Clark had remarkably similar backgrounds. Both came from Albemarle County, the central Virginia region that was also home to Jefferson and another of Jefferson's protégés, James Monroe. Like so many members of the Army officer corps, they came from good families in declining circumstances. They had sufficient education to merit commissions and sufficient influence to secure them, but they lacked either the inclination or the ability to enter more lucrative careers. Both had entered the Army in the 1790s, and both wound up in the Old Northwest (now the Midwestern United States). Serving with the military and civilian officials who preserved federal authority in the West proved to be the formative experience for Lewis and Clark. They arrived at the very moment that Indians were forming confederacies of unprecedented power. Clark himself fought at the Battle of Fallen Timbers in 1794, a battle that marked the first significant victory against Indians for the U.S. Army after years in which Indians had crushed or eluded a series of U.S. military expeditions.

By 1800, Meriwether Lewis and William Clark had seen firsthand the overlap of peoples and governments of the kind that abounded where Indian Country and the Illinois Country overlapped. They had also become increasingly committed to federal service. Lewis stayed in the Army, and by 1801 had sufficiently proven both his talents and his loyalties to merit Jefferson's favor. Clark had resigned from the Army in 1798 to take charge of his family's extended landholdings in Virginia and Kentucky. He soon regretted his decision as his efforts to become a planter failed. As a result, he was eager to return to the federal fold and to return to the West in 1803. The expedition that Lewis was planning provided the means to do both. When Lewis asked Clark to join him in July 1803, Clark did not acknowledge his financial problems. Rather, Clark explained that "my situation in life will admit of my absence the length of time necessary to accomplish such an undertaking I will cheerfully join you…and partake of the dangers, difficulties, and fatigues, and I anticipate the honrs & rewards of the result of such an enterprise, should be successful in accomplishing it."

By the summer of 1803, Jefferson's expedition was ready to leave, but it had nowhere to go. Whatever Upper Louisiana might be, its government was clear. Indians may have controlled most of the Missouri River, but the Spanish controlled the intersection with the Mississippi, and this was the place where Lewis and Clark hoped to begin. In 1802, Jefferson sought a passport from the Spanish government that would allow Lewis and Clark to travel through Spanish Louisiana. Jefferson apparently went out of his way to assure Carlos Martínez de Yrujo, the Spanish minister to the United States, that the expedition was no threat to Spain. Yrujo recalled that Jefferson "said that he would give it [the expedition] the denomination of mercantile, inasmuch as only in this way would the Congress have the power of voting the necessary funds." But Jefferson's assurances of his own dishonesty to Congress did little to assuage Yrujo's doubts that Jefferson's intentions were entirely scientific. Besides, whatever the reason for the expedition, Yrujo explained "that an expedition of this nature could not fail to give umbrage to our Government." Yrujo's suspicions were clear. "The President has been all his life a man of letters, very speculative and a lover of glory." To this Yrujo added that Jefferson "might attempt to perpetuate the fame of his administration…by discovering or attempting at least to discover the way by which the Americans may some day extend their population and their influence up the coasts of the South Sea."

American and Spanish officials were particularly suspicious of one another in 1803. In 1800, Spain had returned all of Louisiana—including Upper Louisiana—to France through a secret agreement known as "the retrocession." Although Spain continued to govern the colony, Americans feared this new state of affairs, particularly when Spanish officials in New Orleans imposed severe restrictions on American trade down the Mississippi in 1802. But neither Spain nor the United States had come any closer to answering a series of vital questions. Exactly what was the place that became Missouri? Was it the eastern frontier of Indian country? The western extent of the Illinois Country or the United States? The southern extension of Canada? Or a northern satellite of New Orleans? The answer was, of course, all of these things. It was a place that people saw in profoundly different ways.

Louisiana Territory

On June 18, 1803, Jefferson sent a lengthy set of instructions to Lewis, confident that some diplomatic breakthrough would enable the expedition to proceed. The Indians and European settlers of Upper Louisiana went about their business, unaware of Jefferson's plans to send an expedition through the heart of the Missouri Valley. The Spanish officials who governed them were aware, but were convinced that their government would never allow the Americans to proceed. What nobody knew was that a series of conversations over 4,000 miles away had already transformed Missouri's destiny.

Jefferson was hopeful, in part, because in March 1803 he and Madison had dispatched James Monroe to Paris. When the American minister to France, Robert R. Livingston, seemed incapable of soliciting any assistance from France to resolve the crisis on the Mississippi River, Monroe went to Paris as a special envoy with a specific set of instructions. "The object in view," Madison explained in his opening paragraph "is to procure by just and satisfactory arrangements, a Cession to the United States of New Orleans, and of West and East Florida." To achieve this end, Livingston and Monroe could offer $10 million, a staggering amount of money for the struggling federal government. Madison showed no interest in Upper Louisiana. To the contrary, he repeatedly instructed Livingston and Monroe to remain focused on acquiring only New Orleans and Gulf Coast. His reasons were simple. Like Jefferson and many other American policymakers, Madison believed the first order of business was to secure federal sovereignty east of the Mississippi, not to acquire land further west. In addition, he knew that the West was a difficult place to govern. The United States still had to finish the task of building stable governments within its existing boundaries. It was hardly ready to tackle a similar task beyond the Mississippi.

What nobody in North America knew was that Napoleon Bonaparte had other ideas. By the spring of 1803, he had concluded that France would never be able to conquer the revolt of slaves and free people of color on the Caribbean colony of Saint Domingue. Meanwhile, Napoleon was preparing for war with Great Britain. Short on cash, eager to dispense with a colony that served no purpose, Napoleon was also well aware of the American concerns about the Mississippi River. As Monroe completed his passage across the Atlantic, Bonaparte made his decision. "I think of ceding it [Louisiana] to the United States," Bonaparte informed Francois Barbé-Marbois, his minister of finance who would begin the actual negotiations. "I already consider the Colony as completely lost, and it seems to me that in the hands of that growing power it will be more useful to the policy, and even to the commerce of France than if I should try to keep it."

A month later French and American negotiations had completed the Louisiana Purchase. The treaty ceded all French territory on the North American mainland for $11.5 million and an American agreement to forgive $3.5 million in claims by American citizens against the French government. News of the Louisiana Purchase reached Washington, DC, on the eve of the annual Fourth of July celebrations. While Americans were delighted with the news, few people said much about the acquisition of Upper Louisiana. They were more pleased by the peaceful resolution to the situation that many Americans soon called the Mississippi Crisis.

But the treaty had its problems, not the least of which was the very fact that it included so much land. Worse still was the absence of any wording that established specific boundaries to the cession. So if the Purchase did not even define "Louisiana," it certainly did not define a place called "Missouri." From Jefferson's perspective, one of the few immediate benefits of the Purchase was to remove any European impediments to the Lewis and Clark Expedition. In November 1803 he informed Lewis that "As the boundaries of interior Louisiana are the high lands inclosing all the waters which run into the Mississipi or Missouri directly or indirectly, with a greater breadth on the gulph of Mexico, it becomes interesting to fix with precision by celestial observations the longitude & latitude of the sources of these rivers, and furnishing points in the contour of our new limits." Suddenly the Louisiana Purchase not only made the Lewis and Clark expedition possible, it made it important.

Lewis and Clark arrived on the edge of Upper Louisiana in the winter of 1803, waiting for spring weather and the official transfer of Upper Louisiana to the United States. They were on hand in March 1804 when a formal ceremony marked the end of European rule. Four months earlier, the United States had taken charge in New Orleans with an elaborate ceremony. Events in St. Louis were more modest. Overseeing the transfer of power fell to Captain Amos Stoddard, a forty-two year-old veteran of the American Revolution for whom promotion in the United States Army had never come as fast as it did for Lewis.

The transfer was an amicable process after all the tension between the United States, France, and Spain. When Stoddard arrived in St. Louis, he was greeted by Carlos Delassus, the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana. The man was born in France with the name of Charles De Hault De Lassus, but had moved to the Mississippi Valley, where he secured high office under the Spanish and changed his name accordingly. "I hope you will accept of a Room which is the same one where I reside," Delassus informed Stoddard. "There will be a little impediment between us, because you do not Speack more the Spanish and French tongues than I do the English, but We Will endeavor to supply it by Ynterpreters." Stoddard replied accordingly, explaining that "I consider the civilities bestowed upon me as a favorable omen of our future harmony."

This correspondence set the stage for ceremonies on March 9 and 10, 1804. Now known as the "three flags ceremony," the process of transferring Upper Louisiana included lowering the Spanish flag and restoring the French flag for the briefest possible period before it, too, was replaced by the stars and stripes of the United States. Stoddard addressed the local population, informing them that "the period has now arrived, when, in consequence of amiable negotiations, Louisiana is in possession of the United States." To this he added that he was "directed to cultivate friendship and harmony among you, and to make known the sentiments of the United States relative to the security and preservation of your rights, both civil and religious." Stoddard made it sound so simple, but connecting Upper Louisiana to the United States would prove a daunting task.

Stoddard himself played only a minor role in this process. He was eventually transferred south. Nor did Lewis and Clark dawdle long after the transfer. In May 1804 they began their extraordinary journey to the West. Their lengthy and detailed journals made few references to the place that became Missouri. It was the one part of their trek that had already been surveyed. Of far greater interest—and far greater ignorance—were points farther west. In the two years that followed, Lewis and Clark completed an epic journey across the western two-thirds of North America. They ascended the Missouri River in 1804, wintered at the Mandan villages in North Dakota during the winter of 1804-1805, traversed the Rocky Mountains in 1805 before reaching the Pacific Coast, where they spent the winter of 1805–1806 in the company of the Clatsop Indians. In the spring of 1806 they made a speedy return, reaching St. Louis less than six months after leaving their camp on the Pacific.

As Lewis and Clark neared St. Louis, they received the following report on developments in the region:

> this Gentleman informed us of maney changes & misfortunes which had taken place in the Illinois amongst others the loss of Mr Cady Choteaus house and furniture by fire. ... he also informed us that Genl. Wilkinson was the governor of the Louisiana and at St. Louis. 300 of the american Troops had been cantuned on the Missouri a fiew miles above it's mouth, Some disturbance with the Spaniards in the Nackatosh [Natchitoches] Country is the cause of their being called down to that country, the Spaniards had taken one of the U. States frigates in the Mediteranean, Two British Ships of the line had fired on an American Ship in the port of New York, and killed the Capts. brother. 2 Indians had been hung in St. Louis for murder and several others in jale. and that Mr. Burr & Genl. Hambleton fought a Duel, the latter was killed.

It was rushed report of local, national, and international events. It showed how much had changed in the political structure. When Lewis and Clark had left St. Louis in 1804, documents were en route that would make a first effort to define an American vision of Upper Louisiana. On March 26, 1804, Congress approved "An Act erecting Louisiana into two territories, and providing for the temporary government thereof." Congress began by preserving much of the same boundaries of the old European empires. Most of Lower Louisiana, land that eventually became the State of Louisiana, was named the Territory of Orleans. After an extensive list of provisions for the Territory of Orleans, the Governance Act explained that "the residue of the province of Louisiana, ceded to the United States, shall be called the District of Louisiana, the government whereof shall be organized and administered as follows: The executive power now vested in the governor of the Indiana territory, shall extend to, and be exercised in the said District of Louisiana."

So in 1804, the United States had come no closer than the Europeans to creating a place called "Missouri." Congress had, in fact, acted to the contrary, subsuming the whole of Upper Louisiana under the jurisdiction of the Indiana Territory. So who would govern this vast territory? Technically, an area covering nearly one third of the continent would be the responsibility of a thirty year-old Virginian with limited experience in civil government. His name was William Henry Harrison, and while he would become one of the leading political figures of his generation (after a lengthy career, he was elected president in 1840 only to die less than a month after his inauguration), in 1804 he was just another one of Jefferson's western men. Like Lewis and Clark, he was a Virginian of a good background whose early career had been in the United States Army, mostly fighting Indians in the Old Northwest. Also like Clark, Harrison was at the Battle of Fallen Timbers in 1794 and left the army in1798. Rather than try his hand at private business affairs, however, Harrison opted for a political career. He was appointed secretary for the Northwest Territory, and in 1799 was elected the territory's delegate to Congress. In 1801 he took charge of the Indiana Territory, which included most of what now constitutes Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. In 1804, the Governance Act creating the District of Louisiana vastly increased what was already a large domain.

No sooner did news of the Governance Act reach St. Louis late in the spring of 1804 than local residents reacted with anger. By the summer of 1804, residents of both the Territory of Orleans and the District of Louisiana had composed "Remonstrance of the People of Louisiana Against the Political System Adopted by Congress for Them." The initial statements from the District of Louisiana seemed promising. The Remonstrance explained that local residents "were filled with the most lively pleasure at the first rumour of the Cession of Louisiana to the United States." But the Governance Act crushed their hopes, and they denounced the legislation in the strongest terms possible. "The dictates of a foreign Government!

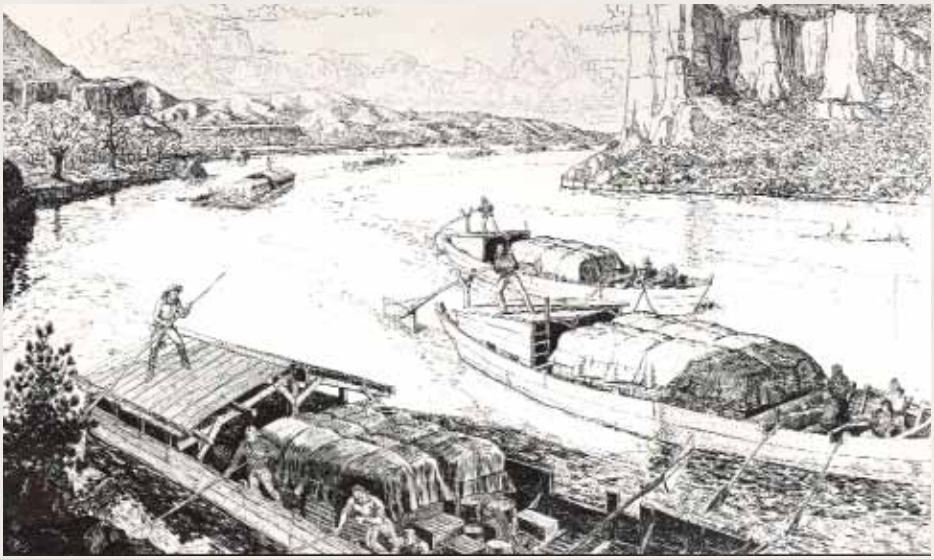

an incalculable accessession of savage hordes to be vomited on our borders! An entire privation of some of the dearest rights enjoyed by freemen! These are the leading features of that political system which you have devised for us."

First and foremost in the Remonstrance was the matter of statehood. The United States had already shown that it would create new states from its western frontier, but it seemed to be postponing any statehood for the land acquired through the Louisiana Purchase. "If Congress has a right to divide Louisiana into two Territories last year, they may claim next year the right to divide it into four, into eight Territories. Whenever the population of one of those Territories shall amount to very near the population required by the constitution of the United States, to entitle that Territory to be admitted in the Union as an independent State, Congress may again claim the right to subdivide said Territory."

In the meantime, the District of Louisiana did not even have its own government. The Remonstrance complained that in other territories Congress required governors "to reside in the Territory which he governs…[and to] hold a freehold estate in the same Territory." Now the District of Louisiana would be governed by a man hundreds of miles away with no real connection to the people or their interests.

What the authors of the Remonstrance wanted was simple. They demanded a territorial government of their own. And while they resented being treated differently from other territories, they nonetheless wanted the federal government to acknowledge the region's distinct background. They wanted public officials who spoke both English and French and wanted public records kept in both languages. They demanded greater defense against Indians. Finally, they demanded written promises that they would be able to continue in the possession of their slaves and that contracts made under Spanish rule would remain in effect. Both were matters of particular importance because the Governance Act of 1804 prohibited the foreign slave trade in the lands acquired through the Louisiana Purchase and federal land laws might call into question the titles of European settlers in Upper Louisiana. In other words, the Remonstrance simply repeated what a lot of white settlers had sought all along: new political and commercial opportunities, racial supremacy, and stronger connections to the rest of the world.

The list of men who signed this document included Auguste Chouteau. Not only was he emerging as one of the leading figures in American Missouri, but his own story, like that of Lewis and Clark, is crucial for understanding this era in Missouri's history. As a boy, Chouteau had been present at the creation of St. Louis. Although not a Creole, by 1804 he was one of its wealthiest residents. He was fifty-four years old, lived in a mansion that commanded the center of St. Louis, and had built a fur-trading empire that extended up the length of the Missouri River. Chouteau's family had prospered as well. His half-brother, Pierre, negotiated with the Indians who were such a vital part of any successful trading venture. Pierre even enjoyed an official monopoly in all negotiations with the Osage. Both Auguste and Pierre were adopted by the Osage. Pierre may well have conceived children with an Osage woman, and other members of the Chouteau family were certainly the product of interracial unions.

If Chouteau and his relatives embodied the elaborate systems of "family" in Upper Louisiana, he also exemplified the limitations of the anger expressed in the Remonstrance. American officials soon found they had a ready ally in Auguste Chouteau. He had adjusted easily to changes in government, and was eager to work with political officials so long as they shared his commitment to regional development. Chouteau's outlook provided benefits for all concerned. Jefferson gave Chouteau's family political favor and seemed relieved to have found an influential local citizen who supported the administration's goals. Meanwhile, the office provided obvious advantages for Chouteau's business ventures at the very moment he faced stiff competition from a Spaniard named Manuel Lisa.

Chouteau even hosted a dinner for William Henry Harrison when the governor of Indiana finally came to visit the District of Louisiana. Members of the French-speaking elite were like frontier residents throughout North America. They had ethnic ties that linked them to specific European countries, but they were not diehard Frenchmen or Spaniards or Americans. Rather, they were pragmatists, and they had to be. The frontiers they occupied were isolated and often dangerous. Survival, let alone prosperity, seemed to depend on the ability to build ties with the centers of political power. Yet the eagerness to be more closely tied to the United States did not mute the anger of the Remonstrance. A policy that continued to isolate the District of Louisiana could only promote greater anger, and to officials in Washington local anger meant a weaker union.

The message came through loud and clear. A special Congressional committee explained that "the United States cannot have incurred a heavy debt in order to obtain the Territory of Louisiana merely with a view to the exclusive or especial benefit of its inhabitants, your committee, at the same time, earnestly recommend that every indulgence, not incompatible with the interests of the Union, may be extended to them." The report concluded that "only two modes present themselves whereby a dependent province may be held in obedience to its sovereign State—force and affection." The right choice was clear. The United States would need to coopt the white residents of Missouri, since ruling them by force seemed both morally unacceptable and practically impossible.

The outcome was not everything the residents of the District of Louisiana had sought, but it was close. In 1805, Congress revised the system of government by creating a distinct territory. The District of Louisiana, including the region that became Missouri, now became the Territory of Louisiana, complete with its own governor and an expanded system of judges. If those claims did not guarantee that the old Spanish land grants would remain in effect, they did provide a means for local residents to get their claims approved once and for all.

Thomas Jefferson also thought he had an ideal candidate for the territory's first governor. Rather than select from the young Virginians who were quickly populating the territorial constabulary, Jefferson went with an old war horse. Brigadier General James Wilkinson was the senior officer in the United States Army and the immediate commander of all western troops. He had been on hand in December 1803 for the transfer of power in New Orleans, and stayed in the Territory of Orleans in the years that followed.

Presidents since George Washington had selected Wilkinson for high appointment because he seemed resourceful and industrious. Wilkinson was certainly a survivor, this at a time when many senior Army officers saw their careers disintegrate. Unknown to Presidents Washington, Adams, or Jefferson, Wilkinson was also a schemer, and, in the end, a traitor. By the time Wilkinson arrived in St. Louis, he was already on the Spanish payroll, providing information on American activities throughout the West. He was in league with Aaron Burr, the former vice president who in 1806 headed west at the head of a mysterious venture that many Americans assumed to be a separatist venture (Burr's specific intentions remain impossible to discern).

Wilkinson was also a poor governor. The territorial capital of St. Louis was becoming home to loud political debates that Wilkinson usually interpreted as personal attacks. What he failed to appreciate were the limitations of the political system itself. The local Francophone elite, eager for public appointments, were colliding with American newcomers also pursuing political opportunities. While some local residents like Chouteau did receive office, most senior appointments went to the Americans. While this appointment policy convinced Francophone residents that Wilkinson favored Americans, few of those newcomers were enamored with Wilkinson. By November 1805, a territorial judge and former Pennsylvania Congressman named John Lucas informed Secretary of the Treasury Albert Gallatin that "it is the misfortune of governor Wilkison [sic] not only to be vain and excessively fond of pageantry, but his unbounded Love of Power makes him also restless."

In June 1806, Wilkinson confided that his enemies "say the thing is done to get me out of the way…God knows why it is done but it is certainly most unexpected." Wilkinson was always astute, but in this case a little too self-pitying. Jefferson had indeed run out of patience with Wilkinson, but not simply because Wilkinson's opponents wrote against him. Jefferson had hoped Wilkinson would make greater progress toward developing regional politics and trade. Rather than formally remove Wilkinson, Jefferson simply let his commission expire. By that time, Wilkinson had gone south to assume command of federal troops in the Territory of Orleans. And, in an effort to distance himself from Burr, Wilkinson launched an overzealous search for other Burr conspirators.

Jefferson's selection for Wilkinson's successor seemed obvious. Lewis and Clark reached Washington at the very moment that Jefferson lost faith in Wilkinson. So in March 1807, Jefferson submitted a list of nominations for federal office that included Meriwether Lewis as governor of the Louisiana Territory. The list also included a hefty promotion for William Clark. Rather than the long-overdue advancement to captain that Lewis had sought in 1803, Jefferson recommended Clark for lieutenant colonel. The Senate approved Lewis' appointment but rejected Clark's nomination, and much as Clark might claim to be "truly gratified" that the Senate would accept other promotions, it was yet another professional setback for Clark. Once again, however, Jefferson's patronage offered Clark the chance for advancement. The president soon awarded Clark an appointment in the Louisiana Territory as brigadier general in the territorial militia and chief of Indian affairs.

Clark made a speedy trip to the Louisiana Territory, and immediately threw himself into the challenges of coordinating a militia of independent-minded settlers and asserting federal sovereignty over powerful Indians. In May 1807, Clark reported on a complex state of affairs. He had just met with a visiting Mandan chief, and went out of his way to assure that the chief would return "to his Town in Safety. The party will concist of Ensign Pryor and 14 Soldiers, & young Choteau with 22 men with promotion to trade at the Mandans." Meanwhile, he had more disturbing news about the Osage. A large entourage came to St. Louis, and "their business…was to inform their American father of a Message they had received from the Spaniards, to which seven nations had agreed, and they were invited to be the eight." After this implicit threat of joining a Spanish alliance, the Osage chief complained that a number of officials—including the merchant king Auguste Chouteau and First Lieutenant James Wilkinson, Jr., the general's son,—had committed various infractions of American agreements. Clark reported as well that "a French man was killed near the mouth of the Missouri by a Saukee Indian." Clark eventually concluded that "the great variety of interests Concerned in the Indian Trade of this Country and the irregular method which they have been caried it on, is calculated to give the Indians an unfavourable opinion of the American regulations."

Meanwhile, Lewis had yet to return to the West. He went to Philadelphia to make preparations to publish a narrative based on the expedition. He went to Virginia to settle family business affairs. Finally, he made a lengthy transit to St. Louis, reaching the territorial capital in March 1808. Lewis found himself immediately thrown in a world of heated politics, interracial diplomacy, and public administration, which revealed the limits of his abilities. In fact, the very skills that made him such a successful leader of the Corps of Discovery may well help account for the difficulties he faced as territorial governor. Rather than give orders, he had the more difficult task of negotiating with the political and commercial elite. Likewise, the regular contact—and conflict—between Indians and white settlers in the Territory of Louisiana was a far cry from the situation in the far West, where most Indians could afford to be good hosts to short-term guests like the Corps of Discovery.

Lewis seemed to believe that he would be able to master local politics and quickly establish himself as the leading regional figure, only to find himself surrounded by men with far greater experience in the give and take of frontier politics. Some of these men, like Chouteau, attempted to help Lewis learn the ropes, but others resented either his policies or the special influence he enjoyed with Jefferson. First among these opponents was Frederick Bates. As territorial secretary, he was Lewis' immediate subordinate and, in theory, his closest ally. But Bates had also served as acting governor during the extended period before Lewis arrived in the Louisiana Territory, and was confident in his own understanding of regional affairs. Bates was only three years younger than Lewis, and he also came from a well-connected Virginia family that was seeking its fortune in the West. Bates considered Lewis "an overgrown baby," and believed that Jefferson's own personal faith in Lewis as well the success of the Expedition itself had made the governor "spoiled by…elegant praises."

While Lewis struggled without much success against his local political opponents, he set out to establish Indian affairs similar to how things had worked on the expedition. He assumed that Indians had to acknowledge federal sovereignty. In this goal he was a typical federal official. But he also respected Indians and recognized that they had legitimate grievances. As the official who would need to implement Indian policy, Clark shared Lewis' general outlook, and while other American officials had shown similar sympathy for Indians, few had the same track record of dealing with Indians on fair terms.

At least Lewis maintained the collegial ties with the Indians of the upper Missouri River that had characterized relations during the expedition. But many of his efforts proved unsuccessful. His own attempt to use the fur trade as a means of promoting both prosperity and connections with Indians encountered numerous problems. Meanwhile, Lewis' commitment to honor his promises with Indians continued to anger settlers and land speculators. The Indians themselves also complained about Lewis' treaties. For example, Lewis' first major treaty, an 1808 agreement with the Osage, did not age well. Two years later, Lieutenant Eli B. Clemson reported that "the Osage Indians Appear to be much dissatisfied in Consequence of a treaty that was made by Governor Lewis in 1808." The Osage already had numerous complaints about American settlers and American officials, but they were particularly concerned by the treaty because it did not fully address the complex inter-racial relations. They also believed that for all his efforts to protect Indians, Lewis had failed to craft a treaty that provided sufficient means to restrain white settlers.

By the fall of 1809, Lewis had proven no more successful than Wilkinson. Rather than a center of trade and development, the Louisiana Territory seemed like a gathering storm of political squabbling, racial conflict, and commercial disputes. Worse still for Lewis, his great defender in Washington had retired. In March 1809, Madison succeeded Jefferson as president. While Jefferson was delighted, Lewis had reasons to worry. Madison and Lewis knew and respected each other, but they had never had a close working relationship. As secretary of state, Madison had also become frustrated with Lewis' performance as governor, and showed little signs of forgiveness when he became president in 1809.

Lewis' personal life was not any more satisfying than his public career. He had invested personally in his faltering efforts to build the fur trade, and his debts continued to grow. Unmarried at age thirty-five, he was nowhere close to starting the family that indicated a successful, mature leader. He began to drink heavily and took various opiates to treat undescribed illnesses.

The combination of personal setbacks and professional failures apparently overwhelmed Lewis in the fall 1809. As he traveled east to meet with his superiors in Washington, the beleaguered territorial governor committed suicide on October 11 near Chickasaw Bluff, Tennessee. Clark was devastated when he heard the news. "I am at a loss to know what to be as his death is a turble Stroke to me, in every respect," Clark confided in a letter to his brother, Jonathan. "I wish I could talk a little with you just now." Clark may have been sad, but like other observers he was hardly surprised. He knew of Lewis' failures, his despondency, and his increasingly erratic behavior. Writing to Jefferson, by then in retirement at his plantation called Monticello, Madison described things in characteristically succinct terms. "We just learn the melancholy fate of Govr. Lewis…He had, it seems, betrayed latterly repeated symptoms of a disordered mind."

The challenges that were the undoing of Meriwether Lewis continued to pose the dominant questions in the Louisiana Territory during the years that followed. What lives would incoming American settlers build for themselves west of the Mississippi? What would become of the slaves that a growing number of settlers brought with them? How would Creoles respond to this state of affairs? Likewise, how would Indians contend with the growing population of white settlers? Finally, what role would officials like Meriwether Lewis see for themselves in all this activity?

Missouri Territory

As far as policymakers in Washington were concerned, all those answers would have to wait. The more immediate problem was creating a stable political leadership. Other territorial governors had served extended terms, and transitions from one to the other had been smooth. Meanwhile, the Louisiana Territory had seen two controversial governors: one left under a cloud of suspicion, the other committed suicide. The solution to this leadership problem that eluded James Madison as secretary of state, continued to dog him as president. The most obvious candidates—Clark and Bates—both refused appointment as governor after Lewis' death. Madison's eventual answer was to select Benjamin Howard. A former Kentucky Congressman, Howard reached the Louisiana Territory in 1810. A more adept politician than Lewis and a less controversial personality than Wilkinson, he brought a necessary calm to the territorial government. By the time Howard reached the territorial capital in St. Louis, local residents were already preparing to demand political change. Once again, however, world events played their own role in shaping the place that became Missouri. Nor was this a coincidence. World affairs and local affairs had always come together in the place that became Missouri.

In 1811, Congress received a petition from the Louisiana Territory which explained that the "sister Territories of Orleans, Mississippi and Indiana, are fast approaching to political manhood, under the Fostering hand of the General Government, while Louisiana with a large and fast increasing Population, have not been admitted to the enjoyment of the same Political blessing." The petition specifically requested that the Louisiana Territory receive both an elected territorial legislature and non-voting representation in the United States Congress like those other sister territories. The wording of that request may seem a strangely mixed metaphor, but in its own time it made perfect sense. More importantly, it employed the sort of language that people in the Louisiana Territory knew was common to these sort of appeals. Most Americans described politics as a distinctly masculine act, and participating in that system was a mark of manhood. Meanwhile, Americans used the metaphor of a family to ascribe a harmonious relationship to the states, and sisters seemed to suggest an even more affectionate bond.

In April 1812, Congress transformed the Territory of Orleans into the State of Louisiana. In order to prevent any confusion, Congress also changed the name of the Territory of Louisiana to the Territory of Missouri. Although the territory had the same expansive borders, its political system finally began to meet the expectations of local residents. Congress created a bicameral legislature consisting of an elected territorial house of representatives and a legislative council with members nominated by the house of representatives but selected by the President of the United States. As was the case with all territories, the governor would continue to serve at the President's discretion. Territorial residents still had significant limitations on their political opportunities in comparison to the states, but their status was actually similar to that of other territories. And this was not some pale consolation. The federal government was giving every indication that a state would be created from the Territory of Missouri. The question was simply when.

In 1813, Henry Marie Brackenridge published his own conclusions about the Missouri Territory. After returning from extended travels up the Missouri River in 1811, Brackenridge published a travel narrative that proposed a novel way of thinking about the Louisiana Territory. "Although the executive exercises authority out of the Indian boundary, the territory itself cannot properly be considered as extending beyond it." In other words, in real terms the Missouri Territory ended where Indian Country began. He considered the Mississippi River and 33 degrees latitude to be acceptable eastern and southern boundaries. But he put a western boundary at the Osage villages and a northern boundary at the Sauc and Fox villages, in large part because treaties had established Indian sovereignty over that land. The box that existed between these boundaries corresponds more closely to the current State of Missouri than anybody else had actively envisioned.

It was no ironic twist that Brackenridge's Missouri was defined by Indians. Much of the power in the Missouri Territory still resided in Indian villages. Secretary of War William Eustis actually saw things in a similar way. In an August 1811 letter to Clark, Eustis observed that "as the Indians observe no boundaries, either in their hunting or depredations, it is necessary that the Agents of Government, should exercise their vigilance in every direction." This did not mean that the administration would not negotiate with Indians. To the contrary, Eustis explained that Madison "has consented that the chiefs of the Sacs & Foxes and of the Great & Little Osages may vist him at the Seat of Government." But both statements reflected the same general policy. The federal government was intent on making clear that it wielded final authority over the people within the boundaries of the United States. Believing that power extended to the far West, the very places that William Clark had visited with the Corps of Discovery, remained self-deluding at a time when Indians continued to dominate much of the continent. Further east, however, on the fringes of the Missouri Territory, it seemed a real possibility.

Eustis wrote with such concern because the nation seemed to face threats in all directions. The United States was in the midst of an extended struggle with Indians in the region between the Ohio River and the Great Lakes. American officials were particularly worried by the militant unification movements that gave Indians both the motivation and the means to challenge the federal government. Under the nominal leadership of Tecumseh and his brother, the Shawnee prophet Tenskwatawa, these Indians had suffered a major setback in 1811 in a battle against federal troops under William Henry Harrison at Tippecanoe. Nonetheless, it was clear that Harrison had not scored an overwhelming victory. Of particular concern to Howard and Clark was the possibility of an alliance with the Indians of the eastern Plains and, worse still, an alliance with the British.

Less than a year after Eustis' alarming letter, and only four days after approving the creation of the Territory of Missouri, Congress declared war against Great Britain on June 18, 1812. The reasons were simple. Members of the administration and Congress were convinced that seizing territory in Canada would be the only way to force Britain to revoke limitations on American trade and to stop pressing American sailors onto British warships. The quick victory that many Americans predicted turned instead into a long series of battlefield defeats. The war consumed the attention of policymakers in Washington, and while most of the battles were fought on the northeastern frontier between the United States and Canada, the war had profound ramifications for the Missouri Territory.

Howard may well have wondered about the wisdom of accepting the post of governor. In the winter of 1811–1812, a series of massive earthquakes with an epicenter near New Madrid had flattened whole towns in the Mississippi Valley. The simple fact that those towns were so small prevented greater destruction, but the earthquake left a general sense of fear in its wake. Then came the news in the summer of 1812 that the Missouri Territory would be going to war against numerous enemies. As he contemplated this state of affairs in January 1813, Howard reminded Eustis that a year earlier "I gave it as my opinion that in the spring succeeding the Indians would be troublesome." When "6 & 700 Indians at once came to our frontier, with a view to overrun the whole Settlements between Missouri & Mississippi," it was only through speedy action by territorial forces that the mission failed. Now it was imperative to make preemptive strikes, not on the more powerful Indians of the Upper Missouri River, but on the more dangerous and potentially belligerent Indians of the Missouri Territory. He advised coordinated efforts on both sides of the Mississippi. When it came to the Missouri Territory, Howard recommended that troops "ought to march from Missouri and strike a blow at the Indians of Fox River."

Like so many other federal officials, Benjamin Howard never found a solution to the numerous challenges of governing the Missouri Territory. In March 1813, he received a commission as brigadier general in the United States Army, and while his military jurisdiction included most of the Territory of Louisiana, Madison once again had to select a new territorial governor. This time he picked somebody with local experience. "Know Ye," read an official government commission, "that reposing special Trust and Confidence in the Patriotism, Integrity and Abilities of William Clark, of the Missouri Territory, I have nominated, and by and with the advice and Consent of the Senate do appoint him Governor in and over the said Missouri Territory." The commission was the standard boilerplate for such documents. Still, it did reflect the emerging consensus in Washington that William Clark was the most capable public official in the Missouri Territory. Clark was loyal where Wilkinson was deceptive, reliable where Lewis was mercurial, civic-minded where Bates was ambitious, and committed to territorial development where Howard seemed eager to leave. In William Clark, the administration finally had a leader who seemed capable of handling the numerous challenges of governing the Missouri Territory. William Clark was also willing. He had refused appointment as governor after the suicide of Meriwether Lewis, preferring instead to focus on Indian affairs. In 1813 he was ready to take charge.

Clark's political advancement coincided with a long-overdue conclusion to his responsibilities from the Lewis and Clark Expedition. In 1814, a Philadelphia publisher released History of the Expedition Under the Command of Captains Lewis and Clark, to the Sources of the Missouri, Thence Across the Rocky Mountains and Down the River Columbia to the Pacific Ocean performed during the years 1804-5-6 by Order of the Government of the United States. It was a far cry from the extended scientific treaties that Meriwether Lewis intended to write. Instead, History of the Expedition was a traditional narrative that devoted more space to describing what happened on a day-to-day basis than it did to examining the cultures, landscapes, and animals that the Corps of Discovery encountered along the way. Clark actually had little to do with this text. Clark recognized his own limitations as a writer as well as the competing demands of his public office. He eagerly surrendered most of the editorial work to Nicholas Biddle, the scion of a wealthy Philadelphia family who later became famous as head of the Bank of the United States but who was a budding writer and editor in the early 1800s. Clark's major contribution was to produce a map that accompanied the book. This exquisite example of the cartographer's art not only emerged from the field notes of the expedition, but also attempted to combine geographic information from a variety of other expeditions. The end result was a map of unprecedented detail. Almost two centuries later, the map also stands up as a remarkably accurate representation of North America.

But where was Missouri in this map? Clark as well as anybody knew that such a place did not exist. He recorded the major settlements—both Euro-American and Native American—in the Mid-Mississippi Valley, but his map situated those people within the massive Territory of Missouri that was Clark's charge. This approach made sense. Clark was not supposed to produce a political map or a detailed description of the peoples near the Mississippi Valley. His job was to describe circumstances further west, and William Clark was always particularly keen on fulfilling his mission in a thorough and detailed manner that did not break from his specific instructions.

Clark could only take limited satisfaction in The History of the Expedition. The book did not sell particularly well, regardless of the unprecedented detail in its text or the vision of its elegant map. Besides, Clark was busy enough governing the Territory of Missouri during these demanding years. While a British invasion of the Missouri Territory never materialized, threats of Indian war did. Meanwhile, Clark found that the militia he had directed for so many years was inadequate for the demands of war. He joined a chorus of American officials who complained that the concept of citizen soldiers might be appealing, but that those citizens were rarely willing to serve as soldiers.

Despite these problems, the American hold on the Missouri Territory actually became stronger during the War of 1812. American and British negotiators concluded peace negotiations in November 1814, and by the time both countries ratified the treaty the following year, Clark was consolidating his control over the Indians of the Missouri Territory. Similar developments had occurred throughout the frontiers of the union. The treaty of 1814 may have restored the status quo between the United States and Great Britain, but in the Old Northwest, the Gulf Coast, the southwestern frontier, and in the Missouri Territory, the War of 1812 proved disastrous for Indians. The United States Army crushed Indian unification movements and destroyed innumerable villages, either in response to aggressive action by Indians or simply by using the possibility of an alliance with Great Britain as the pretext for pre-emptive strikes.

In the years that immediately followed, Congress made a series of subtle changes to the territorial government in Missouri concerning the political structure, the legal system, and Indian affairs. Throughout this period, however, one important consistency remained. In its geographical scope, the Missouri Territory was still the direct descendant of the District of Louisiana or, for that matter, the old European province of Upper Louisiana. The Territory of Missouri had two known boundaries—the Mississippi River and the border with the State of Louisiana—and two vague borderlands leading to Canada in the North and Spanish North America in the West. An 1816 map by John Melish shows just how ill-defined the West remained.

In many ways, Melish's map was not all that different from Aaron Arrowsmith's 1795 map. Sure, Melish may have replaced "Louisiana" with "Missouri Territory," but he still described a vast territory. Nonetheless, there were important changes. First, Melish imposed clear western and northern boundaries of the type that Arrowsmith did not, specifically because the boundaries between European empires were the subject of dispute. Melish could draw those boundaries because he also benefited from the work of Lewis and Clark and other American explorers who had attempted to describe the West. Instead of the vast emptiness that Arrowsmith and other mapmakers had put in the North American interior, Melish included rivers, mountains, and Indian villages.

This sort of map did not simply reflect what Americans knew about the West. It made an assertion. It claimed that Americans were in control, that they knew the boundaries and the occupants of the West. This sort of information, and this sort of attitude, were necessary preconditions for any move toward creating new governments.

If maps had yet to show a place that looked like other American states, residents of the Missouri Territory were eager to see that it happened. A series of petitions reached Congress in 1818 and 1819. One of these appeals, sent by the territorial legislature, read like a direct followup to the Remonstrance. "Your memorialists feel a firm confidence," read the petition, "founded on the wise and generous policy heretofore pursued by your honorable body…that they need only pray to be incorporated into the Union." Be that as it may, the petition added that "there are many grievances of which your memorialists might complain." Rather than actually make those complaints, the petition would only explain that any unhappiness was not with the United States, but rather with "the form of government under which they live," namely the territorial system.

This kind of document was actually quite common in the 1810s, as a series of territories successfully sought statehood. Frontier residents proclaimed their political maturity, Congress permitted those residents to write a state constitution, territorial residents held a convention for that purpose, Congress voted to admit the new state, and the President eagerly signed the bill into law. What nobody in the Missouri Territory expected was the controversy their own request would ignite. As Congress went through the motions of discussing enabling legislation in 1819, Congressman James Tallmadge of New York spoke on behalf of a growing number of representatives from free states who opposed any expansion of slavery. He proposed an amendment that would eventually eliminate slavery in the new state, unleashing an explosive debate that consumed Congress in the months that followed. The reasons were simple. As John Taylor, another anti-slavery Congressman from New York, told his House colleagues, "if the few citizens who now inhabit the Territory of Missouri were alone interested in the decision of this question, I should content myself with voting in favor of the amendment…But the fact is far otherwise: those whom we shall authorize to set in motion the machine of free government beyond the Mississippi, will, in many ways, decide the destiny of millions." Even Taylor and Tallmadge's opponents agreed. They recognized that Missouri's future would decide nothing less than the future of slavery and freedom in the United States.

In the end, Congress managed to find a solution that preserved both slavery and freedom, as well as the union itself. The Missouri Compromise permitted Missouri statehood with slavery, so long as a free state of Maine entered as well to provide a rough equality in Congress between the number of free and slave states. In the future, 36º 30′ latitude would provide a division between new slave states in the South and new free states in the North. The Missouri Compromise seemed to offer a permanent solution, since it could be extended west as new territories entered the union. And for over two decades it did work until opponents of slavery or its geographic expansion began mobilizing against pro-slavery advocates who rejected restrictions of any kind, including those imposed by the Missouri Compromise.

This maelstrom came as a surprise to many in Missouri. The white citizens of the territory took slavery for granted. They were also thinking in western terms. This was equally true for William Clark as he approved the petition. Clark took pride in his own role as one of the federal officials who had helped keep the nation unified as it created new territories in the West. But William Clark was also a slaveholder. He had, after all, forced one of his slaves, York, to accompany the Corps of Discovery. While Lewis and Clark wrote glowingly about York's performance on the expedition and York himself acquired a rough equality with the enlisted members of the expedition, a return to white settlements meant a return to business as usual. Clark broke his promise to free York after the expedition and seemed to feel betrayed when York demanded his freedom. While Clark eventually freed York, his delays in doing so and his inability to understand York's apparent ingratitude goes a long way toward explaining the state of affairs in Missouri in 1820.

In the decades that followed, Missouri remained crucial to the debate over slavery. Located at the intersection of free and slave states, people who favored and opposed slavery came into constant collision. William Clark observed this change in the national political scene from a distance. Indeed, his own public career was up for grabs. After seven years as territorial governor during which Clark guided Missouri through tumultuous changes, he logically assumed that he had a base of support. But William Clark had never actually run for elected office, and the gubernatorial race of 1820 provided a rough education. He soon found that he lacked the political skills to build a constituency of his own.

Meanwhile, a host of other men had spent years honing their political skills through the very competition for office and advantage that Clark had sidestepped through the consistent support he enjoyed in Washington. Clark had also acquired enemies, including his colleagues within the territorial government, some of whom became more confident accusing the governor of abusing his powers. Those sort of accusations had become commonplace in territorial Missouri, and had been directed at Wilkinson, Lewis, and Howard. But they had real sticking power, and they cast Clark as a federal crony opposed to democratic politics. Clark had also undermined his own support among the growing number of Anglo-Americans through his close relationship with the Creole elite. Long before election day, it was clear that Clark would never carry the new state. Although his name remained on the ballot, Clark withdrew from active campaigning. Surprised and disappointed though he was by the lack of public support, Clark's actions in 1820 preserved both his dignity and his reputation in ways that would cement his stature as a leading citizen of the American West. By removing himself from the sort of vicious political combat that characterized public life in the State of Missouri, he could sustain his image as a public servant who operated above either personal gain or crass electioneering. It was an image that Clark had always sought.

Victory in the 1820 elections went to men who were more comfortable with the reality of democratic politics. Alexander McNair won the race for governor. Four years later, however, Frederick Bates succeeded him and finally took charge of Missouri after so many years as a subordinate. He had refused appointment as territorial governor after Lewis' death because he worried the office would prevent him from pursuing his own business interests. By 1824, his personal finances and political power were both sufficiently secure for Bates to become governor. Bates' younger brother, Edward, became the state's first attorney general, and eventually served as a Congressman from Missouri before concluding his public career with service as Abraham Lincoln's attorney general. Edward Bates' successor as attorney general was Rufus Easton, who had first crossed the Mississippi as a territorial judge and whose outspoken politics caused no end of trouble for territorial governors. John Scott, Missouri's long-serving territorial delegate, remained in office, only now as voting member of the United States House of Representatives. Finally, the state legislature selected David Barton and Thomas Hart Benton as Missouri's first senators. Of all these officials, Benton cast the biggest shadow, and remains the most well-known of Missouri's antebellum leaders. But Benton also indicated a profound shift in Missouri politics, away from the questions of Indian trade, territorial administration, and foreign affairs. Benton became an architect of the democratic political culture and sectional disputes that defined antebellum America in ways very different from the early American republic.

Noticeably absent from this list of the state's new leaders were members of the leading families from the colonial era. While some did join the state legislature, few could win election for senior state office, let alone federal office. Others, like the Chouteaus, eschewed elected office altogether, preferring to sustain their influence through wealth and through informal connections with the state's Anglo-American elite.

But Creole families could not ignore the relationship between political and economic change as they watched the state government select a new capital, a decision which could well have dangerous consequences for the St. Louis elite. Officials selected a temporary home in St. Charles, a short distance from the old territorial capital of St. Louis. More dramatic changes came in 1826, when the state government was ready to relocate permanently to the empty land that eventually became Jefferson City. The decision to move the capital from the centers of population and culture to a rough outpost made perfect sense in the America of the 1820s. Many other states had done the same thing. Rather than seeing these capitals as lying in the middle of nowhere, many Americans believed the capitals could be at center of everything. Equally important, they hoped that state governments would serve all residents and not become beholden to the powerful interests of a particular city or region. Nor did Anglo-American politicians fail to recognize that taking the capital from St. Louis would further erode the power of Missouri's old French merchant elite.

Missouri

In 1813, Henry Marie Brackenridge had shown considerable insight when it came to the extent of the federal government's authority. He was equally thoughtful when he described the local population. "The whites, consist of ancient inhabitants, and of those who have settled since the change of government. The former are chiefly of French origin; there were scarcely more than three or four Spanish families in this province, and the citizens of the United States, although advantageous offers were held out to them, rarely settled on this side of the river." He explained that the French-speaking population still "resided in villages, and cultivated common fields adjacent to them; in the manner of many parts of Europe." Finally, he added that "there were always good reasons to apprehend the attack of Indians." But Brackenridge saw changes. "For the past three years, the settlements have been increasing rapidly. The American mode, of living on detached farms, has been adopted by a number of the French inhabitants."

William Clark contributed to those changes, both in public office and in private pursuits. Clark did not actually retire after his term as territorial governor ended in 1821. In fact, he only returned to the sort of work that had occupied most of his public career. He never resigned his post as Indian agent, and also enjoyed a brief appointment as surveyor general for federal lands in Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas. And in the same way that Clark's public career had reflected the changes in territorial Missouri, so too did his public responsibilities after 1821 reflect the State of Missouri's ongoing development.

The most dramatic changes came in relations with the Indians of the eastern Plains. Like Meriwether Lewis, Clark had shown a genuine respect for Indians. As an Indian agent, he acquired a reputation among Indians as a more reliable and honest negotiator than many of his American counterparts. But Clark also had a reputation in Washington as a loyal and reliable public official. More and more, these roles came into conflict. In response to Indian militancy in the 1810s and white migration in the 1820s, Clark took an increasingly hard line with Indians. Meanwhile, Indians had little room to maneuver as the United States consolidated its hold in the Missouri Territory. An 1818 treaty with the Osage Indians spoke volumes about the state of affairs. The treaty began by explaining that "the Osage nations have been embarrassed by the frequent demands for property taken from the citizens of the United States, by war parties, and other thoughtless men of their several bands, (both before and since their war with the Cherokees,) and as the exertions of their chiefs have been ineffectual in recovering and delivering such property." Casting the Osage as people no longer capable of governing themselves, the treaty also transferred much of the Osage land to the United States. Clark represented the federal government and concluded negotiations, appropriately enough, at the military outpost of Fort Clark. Auguste Choteau signed the document as well, still enjoying his rule as arbiter between Indians and the federal government.

Agreements like the 1818 Osage treaty became common throughout the United States. The Osage ceded the last of their Missouri lands in 1825, as did the Sauc and Fox in 1824. In 1830, President Andrew Jackson extended the principles of these treaties into the Removal Policy. Originally designed to force all Indians east of the Mississippi to vacate their lands, removal moved westward, following close on the heels of white settlers who continued to demand that their government provide more land for settlement. William Clark remained what he had always been: a loyal public servant. During the 1820s and 30s he helped orchestrate the forced eviction of Indians from Missouri and the surrounding territory.

Removing Indians from Missouri became all the more important to white officials because the state seemed to become more crowded. Throughout the 1820s, thousands of Americans living in the East concluded that their futures lay in the West. The impact on Missouri was immediate and it was staggering. Settlers arrived throughout the 1820s, completing a conversion that was already under way in the 1810s. By the 1830s Missouri was no longer a region of trade with a mixed population of Indians, Francophone merchants, Creole elites, and American newcomers. It was an increasingly crowded state where the majority of settlers were Protestant Anglo-Americans arriving from the East.

Most of these Anglo-American newcomers pursued agricultural pursuits, whether working individual farms or attempting to build large plantations. This did not mean that Missouri ceased to be a nexus for trade. To the contrary, all those newcomers needed to purchase supplies and sell their produce. And with steamboats becoming more reliable and, in turn, abundant, there was a means to transport goods in all directions. The rivers that had always been at the center of life in Missouri became more important as ever larger steamboats moved up and down the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio rivers. St. Louis was the great beneficiary of this growth. The city's population soared, transforming a small frontier town into a booming metropolis.

Some simple numbers tell the story. On the eve of statehood, the 1820 census recorded a population for the Territory of Missouri of 66,586 people. Ten years later, that number had more than doubled to an astonishing 140,455. The increase in the slave population kept pace, increasing from 10,222 in 1820 to 25,096 in 1830. Those numbers continued to surge into the 1840s, as immigrants from western Europe joined the stream of migrants from the East.

People like Auguste Chouteau and William Clark welcomed these changes, albeit for different reasons. For merchants like Chouteau, greater populations meant greater commercial opportunities. He invested in banking and, like Clark, became a land speculator. Also like Clark, he was a slaveholder, and after his death in 1829, twelve of those slaves went to his wife while an additional thirty-six were sold. Chouteau needed to diversify, because the very success of Chouteau's fur empire contributed to its demise. With beaver and other fur-bearing animals hunted to near-extinction, Chouteau wisely expanded his interests.

For public officials like Clark, peaceful development was an indication of the sort of progress that a good government should help deliver. Nor did Clark lack personal reasons. After watching the prosperity of his parents and his siblings collapse in the years before the Lewis and Clark Expedition, Clark made certain that he would provide for his own family.

Clark's strategy for financial security could not have been more different from Lewis'. First of all, he made certain to keep his personal finances separate from government business. Not only did this make good business sense, but it prevented any accusations of corruption. Of course, Clark's influence and contacts put him in a preferable position for any business deal, but he nonetheless managed to keep his public and private worlds sufficiently separate to avoid ethical problems. And unlike Lewis, who focused on the fur trade, Clark sought his fortune through a more reliable source of profit on the western frontier: land speculation. Throughout the 1810s, '20s, '30s, William Clark set about acquiring plots of land dispersed throughout Missouri.

Clark seemed to exemplify the sort of opportunities that Americans found on the frontiers of North America. After a series of personal and professional setbacks, Clark's life suddenly took shape in the West. Professionally, the expedition finally provided a springboard for advancement within the federal government. Meanwhile, Clark also found that his personal life could finally move forward. In June 1808 he married Julia Hancock, a Virginian like himself. If Clark was unusual in his high level of government appointment, his family was actually representative of what so many people experienced in the Missouri of the early nineteenth century. Clark brought Julia with him to Missouri, apparently never wondering if she wanted to come. Like women throughout the United States, the advancement of family meant separation from friends and from kin.

Julia bore five children before dying in 1820 at her father's Virginia estate. Clark traveled with her to Virginia, and his absence from Missouri contributed to his unsuccessful gubernatorial candidacy. A year later, Clark married again, and his second wife, Harriet, had two sons before she, too, died in 1831. Of Clark's seven children, three died in childhood. This sort of mortality was all too common in the early American republic.

Clark was typical of Missouri newcomers in one other way. When William and Julia Clark put down roots in Missouri, they brought most of their slaves with them. While Missouri never became home to plantations on the scale of older states like Virginia and South Carolina, or even the newer plantation societies in Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, slavery itself was no less important to the region's development. An 1829 case before the St. Louis Circuit Court provides a glimpse at slave life in rural Missouri, as well as the systems that were supposed to preserve enslavement. At midnight on August 29, 1829, Daniel Bissell's plantation was home to a celebration among his slaves. Bissell himself was a veteran of the territorial government. A brigadier general in the United States Army, he had worked with William Clark in the territory to establish federal authority over Indians and plan defenses against any European threats. Bissell and Clark also owned neighboring plantations. Ben, one of Clark's slaves, came to the party, and other slaves in attendance claimed he was looking for trouble. A fight ensued between Ben and a slave named Bill who came from yet another plantation. One slave remembered hearing "Oh God he is stabbed!" Ben later admitted to stabbing Bill, but claimed he did so only to hurt Bill, and then only as payback for an insult. (A jury subsequently found Ben guilty of assault with intent to kill and sentenced him to receive twenty lashes as punishment.)

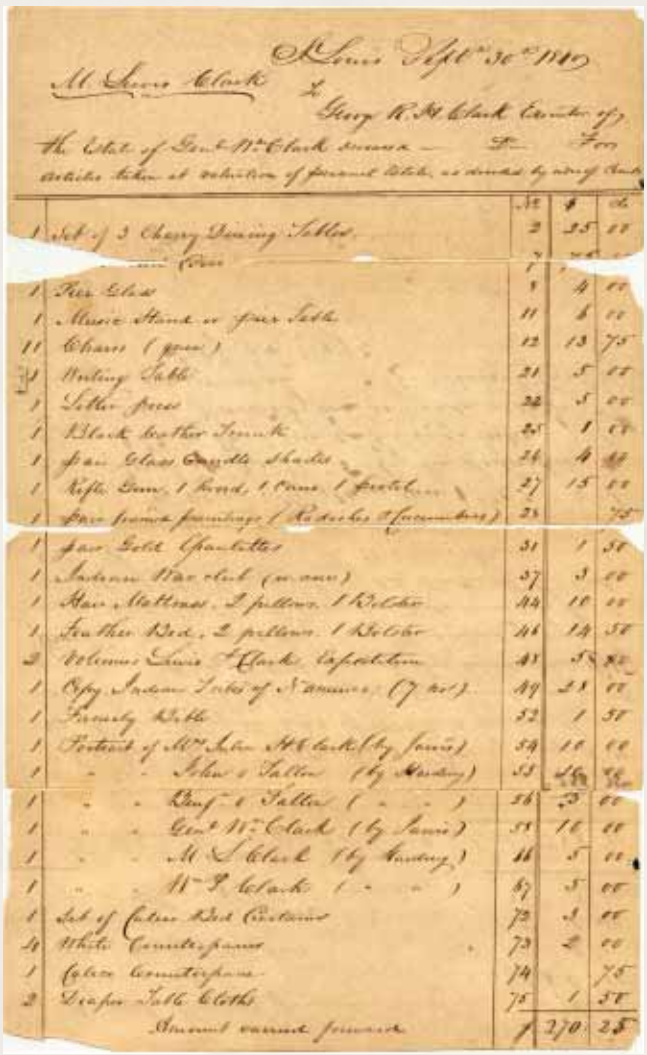

Missouri law actually forbade slaves from moving about this freely, in large part because whites feared that slaves from different plantations could conspire to lead a slave revolt. Benjamin's actions showed the reality that even men like Clark and Bissell, for all their experience governing the interracial population of Missouri, could never fully control their own slaves. Meanwhile, the fight itself reveals just how complex plantation life could be. Slaves met, celebrated, and bore grudges with the same energy as other Missourians. Finally, it serves as a reminder of realities that men like Clark never fully appreciated. At a certain fundamental level, Clark never quite understood the meaning of slavery, nor did many other Missourians. Clark's focus on establishing government in the West overshadowed an awareness of slavery's potential as a source of political dispute.

By the time he died in 1838, William Clark's legacy was ambiguous. While he had helped to create a stable society in Missouri, he had done so at the cost of Indians and African Americans. His personal legacy to his family was no less confusing. In terms of the property that he owned, Clark was a wealthy man. But Clark was also cash poor, and the salary he continued to draw from the federal government was a vital source of revenue. He had gambled on Missouri's future, struggling to pay for land while he waited for the value of that land to appreciate. In the end, his gamble paid off. With settlers rushing into Missouri, the demand for land kept prices rising throughout the antebellum era.

Clark's will provides a revealing window to his own life and to life in Missouri. For example, he was sufficiently wealthy to leave his oldest son, Meriwether Lewis Clark, $8,000 in cash plus land in Missouri, Indiana, and Kentucky worth an estimated $8,700. Settling Clark's estate took years. His probate record, which includes his will and all the documents that went into settling his affairs, is a massive document just over 500 pages. Most of that probate record is devoted to settling Clark's land holdings. This too was common, for land speculators often died without the sort of reliable surveys that made for a speedy distribution of land. Meanwhile, an 1840 list of Clark's personal possessions listed the sort of objects that a wealthy St. Louisian might own. That list included the following:

1 pair Cherry Card tables $12.00
1 Cherry Dressing table $2.00
1 Hair bottom sofa $10.00
1 Rifle gun & 1 Hunting knife $20.00
1 large feather bed $20.00
1 Copy Indian tribes of N. America (7 vols.) $28
1 Engraving of Meriwether Lewis 12 ½ cents

These simple objects further detailed Clark's world. The furniture included the objects of a wealthy man with access to sophisticated goods. They were the sort of thing that men on frontiers struggled to acquire as proof of their sophistication, wealth, and their distance from the rough world around them. Meanwhile, the rifle, the knife, and the multivolume description of Indians reflected the complex, often violent multiracial world of Missouri. Finally, the engraving of Meriwether Lewis reflected not only Clark's enduring admiration for his friend, but also the simple fact that the Corps of Discovery had transformed Clark from a former army officer in declining circumstances to a leading citizen in the nation's commercial emporium. And the value of that engraving was appropriate. During the twentieth century, Meriwether Lewis would become a legend, his reputation overshadowing that of William Clark. But in the 1830s, Lewis was an example of opportunities lost, while Clark was a model of opportunities realized.

The year after Clark died, a new map finally showed Missouri in all its glory. The mapmaker was none other than John Arrowsmith, nephew of the man whose 1795 map had so inspired Jefferson in its meticulous detail but so frustrated Jefferson with its lack of information on the West. Based on the work of David Burr, a former topographer for the U.S. Post Office, this 1839 map placed Missouri squarely in the center of the United States. Standing out with bright yellow coloring in comparison to the more muted colors for the surrounding states and territories, this map also showed the work of Lewis and Clark. Much of the detail on the North American West reflected information gathered by expeditions like the Corps of Discovery. Meanwhile, Missouri itself was filled with the names of burgeoning towns and cities, the sort of regional development that Lewis and Clark had always sought. Finally, just beyond Missouri's boundaries are the names of Indian tribes, many of them forcibly transplanted to the plains under Jackson's removal policy.

Lewis and Clark had never attempted to draw such a map. As explorers of the North American West, they were more concerned with the geography, the environment, and the residents then they were with political jurisdictions. But as public officials, this was exactly the sort of map they wanted. Like those other Virginians—Jefferson and Madison—they hoped to "see" a Missouri that was stable and clearly defined. Converting that vision of Missouri into reality remained one of the great accomplishments for the founding generation. It was also their most troublesome legacy. A peaceful, clearly defined Missouri could not exist without removing both Indian power and, in the end, Indians themselves. Likewise, the Missouri they created not only extended the suffering of slaves, but also generated disputes over the expansion of slavery that eventually destroyed the union.

As a result, by the time Clark died in 1838, people still looked at Missouri in different ways, either as a place of opportunities found or opportunities lost. But one thing had changed. There was, in fact, a place called Missouri. And that word had meaning for people. It referred to a state that people recognized as a place of considerable conflict, but also to a place that was unquestionably American.

Note

It is perhaps unusual to end an essay by talking about other historians, but this is an unusual case. People interested in Missouri during the age of Lewis and Clark are lucky. After years in which scholars tended to ignore the early history of Missouri, three books are in the works, each of which will be fascinating in its own right. I call attention to them here to make readers aware, but also to give credit where it is due, because the authors of those books have made a profound impact on the way I think about Missouri history. William Foley, already an accomplished historian of Missouri, will soon publish the first modern scholarly biography of William Clark. Corresponding with the bicentennial of the Lewis and Clark expedition, Foley's extensive research will finally provide a full portrait of Clark, who remains one of the most important figures in western history. In 2004 readers will also be able to read Jay Gitlin's forthcoming book, The Bourgeois Frontier: French Towns in Mid-America and the Course of Westward Expansion, 1763 to 1863, which will offer a comprehensive study of regional culture during the years of transition from European colony to American province. Finally, Stephen Aron is working on a broader regional history tentatively entitled American Confluence. Scholars have long commented that Missouri provides a wonderful case study for explaining the frontiers of North America, and Aron's book will provide exactly that sort of broad context and revealing scope. Anybody who wants to understand why their ancestors came to Missouri, why Missouri came to be in the first place, or why Missouri's history followed its particular path will want to read these books.

Our photo contest for this edition, entitled My Missouri: Photos that Define the Show-Me State represents the best of the best, as chosen by a jury. Because choosing was so difficult, I wish that space permitted the use of all the photos we received.

These photos are the work of photographers throughout our state who went in search of people and places that capture the spirit of Missouri. I was impressed by the power and beauty of their images of landscapes and natural beauty, people of every age, urban and rural settings, and celebrations and festivals in the Show-Me State.

There is no camera so perfect as the human eye. As you view, study, and enjoy these photos, I hope you will carry the images with you as you go about life in Missouri. You will see scenes this beautiful, striking, and powerful, or even more so. You will meet and encounter people like those featured in this photo display. If you keep your eye trained for the beauty, variety and character of Missouri, you are sure to enjoy great rewards.

State Symbols of Missouri

The Great Seal of the State of Missouri

The Great Seal was designed by Judge Robert William Wells and adopted by the Missouri General Assembly on January 11, 1822. The center of the state seal is composed of two parts. On the right is the United States coat-of-arms containing the bald eagle. In its claws are arrows and olive branches, signifying that the power of war and peace lies with the U.S. federal government. On the left side of the shield, the state side, are a grizzly bear and a silver crescent moon. The crescent symbolizes Missouri at the time of the state seal's creation, a state of small population and wealth which would increase like the new or crescent moon; it also symbolizes the "second son," meaning Missouri was the second state formed out of the Louisiana Territory.

This shield is encircled by a belt inscribed with the motto, "United we stand, divided we fall," which indicates Missouri's advantage as a member of the United States. The two grizzlies on either side of the shield symbolize the state's strength and its citizens' bravery. The bears stand atop a scroll bearing the state motto, "Salus Populi Suprema Lex Esto," which means, "Let the welfare of the people be the supreme law." Below this scroll are the Roman numerals for 1820, the year Missouri began its functions as a state.

The helmet above the shield represents state sovereignty, and the large star atop the helmet surrounded by 23 smaller stars signifies Missouri's status as the 24th state. The cloud around the large star indicates the problems Missouri had in becoming a state. The whole state seal is enclosed by a scroll bearing the words, "The Great Seal of the State of Missouri." (RSMo 10.060)

The State Flag

Nearly 100 years after achieving statehood, Missouri adopted an official flag on March 22, 1913. The flag was designed by the late Mrs. Marie Elizabeth Watkins Oliver, wife of former State Senator R.B. Oliver. The flag consists of three horizontal stripes of red, white and blue. These represent valor, purity, vigilance and justice. In the center white stripe is the Missouri coat-of-arms, circled by a blue band containing 24 stars, denoting that Missouri was the 24th state. (RSMo 10.020)

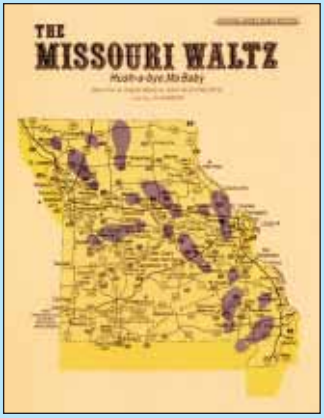

The State Floral Emblem

On March 16, 1923, Governor Arthur M. Hyde signed a bill naming the white hawthorn blossom the official state floral emblem of Missouri. Known as the "red haw" or "white haw," the hawthorn (Crataegus) is a member of the great rose family, which resembles the apple group. The hawthorn blossoms have greenish-yellow centers and form in white clusters. More than 75 species of the hawthorn grow in Missouri, particularly in the Ozarks. (RSMo 10.030)

The State Bird

On March 30, 1927, the native bluebird (Sialia Sialis) became the official state bird of Missouri. The bluebird, considered a symbol of happiness, is usually 6½ to 7 inches long. While its upper parts are covered with light blue plumage, its breast is cinnamon red, turning rust-colored in the fall. The bluebird is common in Missouri from early spring until late November. (RSMo 10.010)

The State Song

The "Missouri Waltz" became the state song under an act adopted by the General Assembly on June 30, 1949. The song came from a melody by John V. Eppel and was arranged by Frederic Knight Logan, using lyrics written by J.R. Shannon. First published in 1914, the song did not sell well and was considered a failure. By 1939, the song had gained popularity and six million copies had been sold. Sales increased substantially after Missourian Harry S Truman became president, and it was reported that the "Missouri Waltz" was his favorite song. (RSMo 10.050)

The State Tree

On June 20, 1955, the flowering dogwood (Cornus Florida L.) became Missouri's official tree. The tree is small in size, rarely growing over 40 feet in height or 18 inches in diameter. The dogwood sprouts tiny greenish-yellow flowers in clusters, with each flower surrounded by four white petals. The paried, oval leaves are olive green above and covered with silvery hairs underneath. In the fall, the upper part of the leaves turn scarlet or orange and bright red fruits grow on the tree. (RSMo 10.040)

The State Mineral

On July 21, 1967, the mineral galena was adopted as the official mineral of Missouri. Galena is the major source of lead ore, and the recognition of this mineral by the state legislature was to emphasize Missouri's status as the nation's top producer of lead. Galena is dark gray in color and breaks into small cubes. Mining of galena has flourished in the Joplin-Granby area of southwest Missouri, and rich deposits have been located in such places as Crawford, Washington, Iron and Reynolds counties. (RSMo 10.047)

The State Rock

Mozarkite was adopted as the official state rock on July 21, 1967, by the 74th General Assembly. An attractive rock, mozarkite appears in a variety of colors, most predominantly green, red or purple. The rock's beauty is enhanced by cutting and polishing into ornamental shapes for jewelry. Mozarkite is most commonly found in Benton County. (RSMo 10.045)

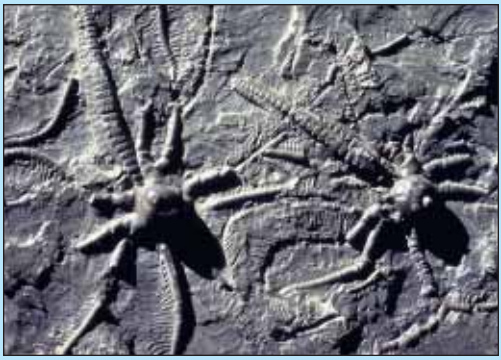

The State Insect

On July 3, 1985, Governor John Ashcroft signed a bill designating the honeybee as Missouri's state insect. The honeybee, (Apis Mellifera) yellow or orange and black in color, is a social insect which collects nectar and pollen from flower blossoms in order to produce honey. The honeybee is common to Missouri and is cultivated by beekeepers for honey production. (RSMo 10.070)

The State Musical Instrument

The fiddle became the state's official musical instrument on July 17, 1987. Brought to Missouri in the late 1700s by fur traders and settlers, the fiddle quickly became popular. The instrument was adaptable to many forms of music, could be played without extensive formal training and was light and easy to carry. For generations, the local fiddle player was the sole source of entertainment in many communities and held a position of great respect in the region. (RSMo 10.080)

The State Fossil

On June 13, 1989, the crinoid was adopted as the state's official fossil. The crinoid (Delocrinus missouriensisis) is the fossilized remains of an ancient sea animal that resembles a plant and is related to the starfish and sand dollar. Although not as abundant as they once were, there are about 600 species alive in the ocean today. (RSMo 10.090)

The State Tree Nut

The nut produced by the black walnut tree (Juglans Nigra), known as the eastern black walnut, became the state tree nut on July 9, 1990. The nut has a variety of uses. The meat is used in ice cream, baked goods and candies. The shell provides the soft grit abrasive used in metal cleaning and polishing and oil well drilling, and is also used in paint products and as a filler in dynamite. (RSMo 10.100)

The State Animal

On May 31, 1995, Governor Mel Carnahan signed a bill designating the Missouri mule as the official state animal. The mule is a hybrid, the offspring of a mare (female horse) and a jack (male donkey). After its introduction to the state in the 1820s, the mule quickly became popular with farmers and settlers because of its hardy nature. Missouri mules pulled pioneer wagons to the Wild West during the 19th century and played a crucial role in moving troops and supplies in World Wars I and II. For decades, the Show Me State was the nation's premier mule producer. (RSMo 10.110)

The State American Folk Dance

The square dance was adopted as Missouri's official American folk dance on May 31, 1995. Square dances are derived from folk and courtship dances brought to the United States by European immigrants. Lively music and callers are hallmarks of square dancing. The caller directs the dancers by singing the names of figures and steps to be performed. (RSMo 10.120)

The State Aquatic Animal

The paddlefish (Polyodon Spathula) became Missouri's official aquatic animal on May 23, 1997. Only three rivers in Missouri support substantial populations of the paddlefish: the Mississippi, Missouri and the Osage. They are also present in some of the state's larger lakes. The paddlefish is primitive, with a cartilage skeleton, rather than bone.They commonly exceed five feet in length and weights of 60 pounds; 20-year olds are common, and some live 30 years or more. (RSMo 10.130)

The State Fish

On May 23, 1997, Governor Mel Carnahan signed a bill designating the channel catfish as the official fish of Missouri. The channel catfish (Ictalurus Punctatus) is slender, with a deeply forked tail. Young have spots that disappear with age. The catfish does not rely on sight to find its food; instead, it uses cat-like whiskers to assist in the hunt. The channel cat is the most abundant large catfish in Missouri streams. Its diet includes animal and plant material. Adults are normally 12 to 32 inches long and weigh from a half-pound to 15 pounds. (RSMo 10.135)

The State Horse

On June 4, 2002, the Missouri fox trotting horse became Missouri's official state horse. Missouri fox trotters were developed in the rugged Ozark hills of Missouri during the early 19th century. Bloodlines can be traced from early settlers to Missouri from the neighboring states of Kentucky, Illinois, Tennessee and Arkansas. The distinguishing characteristic of the fox trotter is its rhythmic gait, in which the horse walks with the front feet and trots with the hind feet. This gait gives the rider a smooth gentle ride. (RSMo 10.140)

The State Grape

On July 11, 2003, the Norton/Cynthiana grape (Vitis Aestivalis) was adopted as the official state grape. This adaptable, self-pollinating variety has been cultivated since the 1830s and is likely North America's oldest grape variety still commercially grown. Norton/Cynthiana has long been prized by Missouri vintners for its hardy growth habit and intense flavor characteristics, which produce lush, dry premium red wines of world-class quality and distinction. (RSMo 10.160)

Missouri Day

On March 22, 1915, the 48th General Assembly set aside the first Monday in October each year as "Missouri Day," due to the efforts of Mrs. Anna Brosius Korn, a native Missourian. In 1969, the 75th General Assembly changed the date to the third Wednesday in October. Missouri Day is a time for schools to honor the state and for the people of the state to celebrate the achievements of all Missourians. (RSMo 9.040)

Bob Holden

Governor

Elected November 7, 2000
Term expires January 2005

BOB HOLDEN (Democrat) was sworn in as Missouri's 53rd Governor on January 8, 2001. As the first Governor to take office in the new millennium, Holden, a Democrat, has focused on meeting the challenges of a new economy with a special focus on education.

Even during a time of national recession, Holden has not backed down on his priorities of improving Missouri's schools, protecting Missouri senior citizens, improving the health and safety of Missourians, and creating jobs for the future.

At a time when 17 others states were cutting elementary and secondary education, Missouri added funding, passed one of the nation's strongest educational accountability bills, and initiated an innovative new character education program into the schools. Despite severe budgetary challenges, Holden continues to fight for higher education funding and has provided millions of dollars in support for university research as a means of fueling the state's economy and moving Missouri toward the knowledge-based economy of the future.

Raised on a farm in the Ozarks, Holden respects and supports the role of agriculture in Missouri. He has worked to improve the link between agriculture and life sciences research. He has also improved agricultural marketing efforts including a new focus on the value-added side of agriculture, which allows farmers to expand markets and increase economic opportunities.

Holden has balanced Missouri's budget and maintained the state's AAA bond rating, which demonstrates the financial market's endorsement of the state's fiscal management and responsibility. Governing magazine gives Missouri a 4-star rating, the highest possible, for good management.

Holden's success has placed him in a leadership position among Governors nationally. He was elected chair of the Midwestern Governors' Conference where he is leading the Midwestern states' efforts to stimulate the economy by focusing on education and research. Holden has also chaired the Governor's Ethanol Coalition and represented fellow Governors on the National Medicaid Reform Task Force.

Holden developed Missouri@Work, a job growth plan to create and retain high-quality jobs as the economy moves into the knowledge-based economy of the future. In 2003, Holden signed into law legislation aimed at allowing Missouri to become a leader in the rapidly expanding life sciences industry. He also proposed and signed a law that will help rebuild infrastructure in downtown areas and support job creation in both rural and urban communities.

Governor Holden's efforts on behalf of Missouri seniors include the establishment of a prescription drug plan for seniors who could not afford the high cost of medicine. To accomplish this goal, he ordered a special session of the Missouri legislature in 2001 to enact the SenioRx program, which has now aided thousands of Missouri senior citizens. Holden also led the fight for greater protection of nursing home residents and in 2003 signed the Senior Care and Protection Act. The law holds unscrupulous nursing home owners accountable for their actions and keeps bad actors out of the state.

Under Holden's leadership, Missouri was the first state in the nation to name a Homeland Security Director following the terrorist attacks of 9/11. This prompt action by the Governor resulted in increased federal funding for homeland protection efforts in Missouri and an improved security response system for all Missourians.

Holden has worked to protect the health of Missouri children through the Children's Health Insurance Program, MC+ for Kids, providing one of the best health care plans in the nation for low-income children. In his first legislative session as governor, Holden passed the landmark Women's Health Initiative, which dramatically increased health care access and coverage for Missouri women.

Governor Holden's life is an affirmation of the American Dream. Born in Kansas City, raised on a farm in the Ozarks near Birch Tree, Holden attended a one-room school and went on to graduate from Southwest Missouri State University with a degree in political science. He also attended the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University where he took courses specifically tailored for government executives.

Holden met his wife Lori Hauser Holden during his first campaign for the state legislature and they have two boys, 13-year-old Robert and 9-year-old John D.

Governor's Mansion (Mary Pat Abele)

Missouri Governor's Mansion

Governor Bob Holden, First Lady Lori Hauser Holden, Robert Lee III and John D. are very proud to be living in "the people's house"—the Missouri Governor's Mansion.

First occupied by Governor B. Gratz Brown and his family in 1872, this stately three-story brick building is one of the oldest and most beautifully restored Governors' homes in the United States. The Mansion is perched on a bluff near the State Capitol Building and provides a scenic glimpse of the Missouri River. Built in the Renaissance Revival style, the residence entry consists of an imposing portico with four dignified pink granite columns. A Victorian atmosphere greets visitors as they enter the Great Hall with its dramatic 17-foot ceilings, a rare free-flowing staircase of solid walnut, and one of the best collections of period furnishings in the country.

Portraits of 29 Missouri First Ladies are featured throughout the Mansion along with loaned works of art created by world famous Missouri artists George Caleb Bingham, who also served as Missouri State Treasurer from 1862–1865; Thomas Hart Benton and the Harry S Truman family portrait by Greta Kempton. Designed by George Ingham Barnett of St. Louis, the Mansion has been listed on the National Register of Historic Places since May 21, 1969.

Because the Holdens are an energetic family with two young sons, the Mansion and surrounding grounds are always a whirlwind of activity. Passers-by are often treated to basketball games, baseball practice, skateboarding, or bicycle rides around the Mansion drive. The Holdens' two dogs, Nike and Silver, may also be frequently viewed romping across the Mansion lawn.

Family comes first for First Lady Lori Hauser Holden, although public service and dedication to the Missouri communities she dearly loves comes naturally. Bob and Lori met during Bob's first campaign for the state legislature in 1982, and they were married in 1983. Lori Hauser Holden has established herself as a pro-active First Lady, speaking across the state on behalf of better schools, improved health care, stronger neighborhoods, the fine arts, and promoting Missouri agricultural products.

Mrs. Holden chaired the Missouri Commemorative Quarter Design Committee, which enlisted the public in picking the design of the Missouri quarter. Missouri was the 24th state to enter the Union and therefore the 24th quarter issued by the U.S. mint, when it debuted in the summer of 2003.

The First Lady is also very active in the Lewis and Clark Bicentennial Commission, which is planning events around the state in 2004 to commemorate the 200th anniversary of the beginning of the historic journey. The commemoration of the journey, which began in Missouri, is expected to bring thousands of tourists to the state.

[1]At the time of the elections of McNair, Bates and Williams, and of the first election of Miller in 1825, there were no organized political parties in Missouri. Individual popularity prevailed. All called themselves Republicans—that is, Jeffersonian Republicans, or what now are called Democrats.

[2]Gamble was elected provisional governor by the Missouri State Convention on July 31, 1861. The office had been declared vacated after Governor Claiborne Fox Jackson joined the Confederacy.

Joe Maxwell

Lieutenant Governor

Elected November 7, 2000
Term expires January 2005

JOE MAXWELL (Democrat) was elected Missouri's 45th lieutenant governor on Nov. 7, 2000. After the tragic death of Governor Carnahan on Oct. 16, 2000, Lt. Governor Wilson assumed the duties of governor. Wilson appointed Maxwell Lt. Governor on Nov. 15, 2000.

Joe grew up on the family farm outside the small community of Rush Hill. From a large family, he understood at an early age the importance of responsibility and obligation to one's family.

Service is the foundation of Maxwell's philosophy. He served his country in the Mo. National Guard for twenty years and was called to state active duty during the great flood of 1993.

Elected as a state representative in 1990, Joe earned the reputation for working long hours and taking on tough issues, like welfare reform and health care. He never forgot Missouri's family farms, and his personal experience during the farm crisis. He has worked to help establish value-added agriculture, encouraging several farm cooperatives, like the ethanol plant in Macon.

In 1995, Maxwell was elected 18th Dist. State Senator, representing an area that stretched across a dozen Mo. counties in the northeast region of the state.

As state senator, Maxwell sponsored the Patients Bill of Rights in Mo. and was instrumental in passing legislation focusing on early childhood. During his last legislative session, he worked on HMO reform and small business health care, successfully passed the Financial Exploitation Act to safeguard senior citizens' financial savings. He fought for tougher child protection laws, to help assure safety for Missouri's most vulnerable citizens. Maxwell saw his Child Protection Act become law in July, 2000.

As Lt. Governor, Maxwell serves as official Elderly Advocate for the state. He serves as a member of 15 different boards and commissions including: chair of Mo. Community Service Commission; chair of Mo. SenioRx Prescription Drug Program; chair of Veterans Benefits Awareness Task Force; and vice chair of Missouri Tourism Commission.

Maxwell's awards include: Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. St. Louis Support Group Certificate of Appreciation; Mo. Farmers Union Family Farm Leadership; Mo. Funeral Directors Assn. Legislator of the Year; Mo. VFW Service; Mo. Alliance of Area Agencies on Aging Outstanding Leadership; Mo. Like most Mo. families, Sarah and Joe Maxwell work hard to provide for their children. Their two daughters, Megan and Shannen, serve as constant reminders that Sarah and Joe must strive every day to make this world a better place.

Office of Lieutenant Governor

121 State Capitol, Jefferson City 65101
Telephone: (573) 751-4727
FAX: (573) 751-9422

Qualifications

Missouri's lieutenant governor must be at least 30 years old, a U.S. citizen for at least 15 years and a resident of Missouri for at least 10 years before being elected to the office.

The lieutenant governor is elected for a four-year term and is subject to re-election.

Duties

Under the constitution, the lieutenant governor is ex officio president of the Missouri Senate. Upon the governor's death, conviction, impeachment, resignation, absence from the state or other disabilities, the lieutenant governor shall act as governor. By law, the lieutenant governor is a member of the Board of Public Buildings; the Board of Fund Commissioners; the Missouri Finance Development Board; the Missouri Housing Development Commission; the Missouri Rural Economic Development Council; and the Tourism Commission. The lieutenant governor is an advisor to the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education on early childhood education and Parents-as-Teachers program, and the state's official advocate for Missouri's elderly. The lieutenant governor also refers citizen questions and concerns to appropriate state agencies.

An Office Built on Service

Since William Henry Ashley took the oath of office as the first lieutenant governor in 1820, historic Missouri names like Marmaduke and Price, Dunklin and Reynolds, have served Missourians as lieutenant governor. Modern times have seen the office help develop two quality service organizations: MissouriVolunteer and the Missouri Community Service Commission.

As chair of the Missouri Community Service Commission, it is an honor to continue the legacy of service to citizens throughout Missouri. The 15 different boards and commissions on which the lieutenant governor serves provide many more opportunities to help Missouri citizens. These boards and commissions serve a wide variety of functions for Missouri's diverse population.

By statute, the lieutenant governor is the official Elderly Advocate for the State of Missouri. As such this office investigates complaints on behalf of senior citizens. The Lt. Governor's office works very closely with the Department of Health and Senior Services to ensure the safety and well-being of our Missouri senior citizens.

The lieutenant governor also serves on the Missouri Housing Development Commission. As such, the lieutenant governor has the opportunity to help ensure quality affordable housing for Missourians, regardless of income.

As a board member of the Missouri Rural Economic Development Council, the lieutenant governor works to help foster sustainable community and economic development programs in rural areas.

The lieutenant governor also works to connect the large number of Missouri veterans who are not currently receiving their earned and deserved benefits. Through the creation of the Veterans Benefits Awareness Task Force, the lieutenant governor, as chair of the program, is working to help our tremendous veteran population access the benefits they have earned by serving their country. The task force is involved in several outreach measures including the Supermarkets of Veterans Benefits, where they can discover what benefits they may be entitled to, but have not yet received.

As the state's official advocate for the elderly, the lieutenant governor is a member of the Commission on Special Health, Psychological and Social Needs of Older Minority Individuals. Too often, minority populations suffer disparities in their health status—such as inadequate access to medical facilities, nutritional education, and medical insurance. A recent Kansas City Health Department study found that African Americans in Jackson County can expect to live 11 years less than the general population. The commission makes the health status of minority seniors a priority.

As vice chairman of the Missouri Tourism Commission, the lieutenant governor helps market Missouri to the rest of the world. New visitors bring new revenues to Missouri businesses, and new tax dollars to Missouri. We have two unique opportunities coming up to showcase our beautiful, historic state to the world: First, the world's tour and travel planners are coming to Missouri in 2003 for the Travel International Association's Pow Wow. A year later, the world will focus on Missouri's twin summer celebrations: the 200th anniversary of the Lewis and Clark expedition, and the 100th anniversary of the 1904 Louisiana Exposition, the St. Louis World's Fair.

The Lt. Governor devotes much time and commitment to all of the boards and commissions the office serves including: Board of Fund Commissioners; Board of Public Buildings; Governor's Council on Physical Fitness; Missouri Development Finance Board; Missouri SenioRx Prescription Drug Program; Personal Independence Commission; Second State Capitol Commission; Statewide Safety Steering Committee; and an advisor to the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education on early childhood education.

This list of lieutenant governor's duties shows how the office can help Missourians. Just as important are the many Missourians from every walk of life who give their time and talents to serve on these boards and commissions.

Missouri's State Capitol

State government in Missouri focuses on the state's beautiful, domed Capitol, dominating the bluffs of the Missouri River in Jefferson City.

The dome, rising 238 feet above ground level and topped by a bronze statue of Ceres, goddess of agriculture, is the first view of Jefferson City for travelers arriving from the north. The structure is Jefferson City's leading tourist attraction and is a mecca for school groups who arrive by busloads, particularly during General Assembly sessions when they fill the galleries to watch the Senate and House of Representatives in action.

In addition to housing the two legislative bodies, the Capitol provides office space for the governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, treasurer, state auditor and some administrative agencies. The structure is also notable for its architectural features, including its six 48-foot columns on the south portico and eight 48-foot columns on the north side; its 30-foot-wide grand stairway and its bronze front doors, each 13 by 18 feet—largest cast since the Roman era.

The Capitol's first floor features the State Museum. Outstanding paintings, pediments and friezes decorate the Capitol interior. A prime attraction is a series of Thomas Hart Benton murals in the House Lounge.

Statuary is a prominent feature of the Capitol grounds. Heroic bronze figures depicting Missouri's two great rivers, the Mississippi and Missouri, and a 13-foot statue of Thomas Jefferson dominate the south entrance. A bronze relief depicting the signing of the Louisiana Purchase by Livingston, Monroe and Marbois and the Fountain of the Centaurs are the most outstanding features on the north grounds.

The present Capitol, completed in 1917 and occupied the following year, is the third Capitol in Jefferson City and the sixth in Missouri history. The first seat of state government was housed in the Mansion House, Third and Vine Streets, St. Louis; the second was in the Missouri Hotel, Maine and Morgan Streets, also in St. Louis. St. Charles was designated as temporary capital of the state in 1821 and remained the seat of government until 1826 when Jefferson City became the permanent capital city. The first Capitol in Jefferson City burned in 1837 and a second structure completed in 1840 burned when the dome was struck by lightning on February 5, 1911.

The present Capitol was constructed for $4,215,000, including site and furnishings. It is five stories high, 437 feet long, 300 feet wide in the center and 200 feet wide in the wings. The dome is 238 feet high and the height of the wings is 88 feet. It includes 500,000 square feet of floor space.

Matt Blunt

Secretary of State

Elected November 7, 2000
Term expires January 2005

Missourians entrusted MATT BLUNT (Republican) with the responsibilities of Secretary of State on November 7, 2000. Prior to his election as Secretary of State, Blunt represented the 139th District in the Missouri House of Representatives. He also served on active duty with the U.S. Navy for more than five years and is a Lieutenant Commander in the Naval Reserve.

As Secretary of State, Blunt has improved the quality and accessibility of products and services throughout his office. He has accomplished this while reducing the office's use of Missouri tax dollars and the number of state employees. Quality and speed of service have risen as costs have decreased.

A sixth generation Missourian, Blunt received a bachelor's degree in history from the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, in 1993. Blunt served over five years on active duty. He served as an engineering officer on the USS JACK WILLIAMS (FFG-24) and as Navigator and Administrative Officer on the USS PETERSON (DD-969).

Blunt served in Operation Support Democracy, which involved the United Nations blockade of Haiti. He also participated in the interdiction of illegal migrants and drug interdiction missions off the South American coast. Military commendations received by Blunt include four Navy and Marine Corps Achievement Medals and the Humanitarian Service Medal.

On October 9, 2001, Blunt became the first statewide official in Missouri history called to active military duty, serving for six months in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

Blunt was born in Strafford, Missouri on November 20, 1970. Matt and his wife Melanie were married in March 1997. He is a member of the State Historical Society of Missouri, the American Legion, and Missouri Farm Bureau. He and Melanie attend a Baptist church near their home.

Blunt made it a top priority to restore public confidence in Missouri elections. After the controversial November 2000 election in parts of our state, he formed a bipartisan statewide reform commission. Hearings across Missouri brought the first comprehensive election reform plan in 25 years. Blunt led the successful effort for enactment of this landmark reform legislation. The subsequent November 2002 election was notably free of the controversy and fraud that marred the 2000 election.

The Secretary of State regulates the securities industry to protect the public from investment frauds. Blunt has focused on enforcement and education. Vigorous enforcement brought 90 cease and desist orders for violations of securities laws in the first two years of his term. Blunt also directed his staff to work with other law enforcement agencies, leading to more than a dozen prison sentences. In 2003, Blunt led the successful effort to reform and strengthen Missouri's securities statutes. The division also sponsors educational programs for Missouri students and investors.

Blunt has enhanced the use of new technology in the Secretary of State's office, making Missouri's rich and diverse heritage more accessible through the Missouri State Archives. He also created the African-American History Initiative, which includes the first comprehensive guide to African-American history resources held in the Archives, available on the Secretary of State Internet site, and an annual research internship for a Missouri student in African-American history.

Blunt is using technology to transform business services. Some necessary regulatory transactions for small businesses, such as filing annual reports, or information requests, now can be completed via the Internet at any time, from home or office. The process is user friendly, with instantaneous confirmation. Online filing saves Missouri small businesspeople time and money and reduces cost to taxpayers.

Blunt also has made good on his pledge to make the information in his office more accessible to the general public and to the disabled community. The Missouri State Library and Wolfner Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped have installed new technology to provide patrons with greater access.

Through vigilant oversight of elections, vigorous consumer protection, and new technology, Secretary of State Blunt is working to improve Missouri government and services to the people.

The Secretary of State serves the people in many diverse and important ways. Secretary of State Matt Blunt has improved service to the people, won new laws for election reform and consumer protection, reduced the expenditure of Missouri tax dollars, and has used technology and basic management principles to modernize the office. The major areas of the office are: Elections, Securities, Business Services, Records Services, Library Services, Administrative Rules and Administrative Services.

In addition to serving as Missouri's chief elections official, the Secretary of State keeps the Great Seal of Missouri, authenticates official acts of the Governor, preserves the state's official records, and enforces the laws against investment fraud. Since taking office in 2001, Secretary Blunt has reduced the office employment by nine percent to 266 employees.

The Office of the Secretary of State administers all statewide elections for both candidates and issues. Candidates for the six constitutional state offices, U.S. Congress, the General Assembly, and circuit judges not covered by the nonpartisan court plan, file for election with the Secretary of State. Statewide ballots for primary, general and certain special elections are also prepared by the Secretary of State, and certified copies of those ballots are sent to local election officials. The Secretary of State also certifies statewide ballot measures that are proposed by the General Assembly or through the initiative petition process. The full texts of ballot issues are published in newspapers around the state and printed for display at polling places. It is also the responsibility of the office to canvass, certify, and publish election results.

The office, including the oversight of signature verification, also handles initiative petitions. Before an initiative petition can be circulated, groups must first have the form of the petition and a summary statement approved by the Secretary of State and Attorney General. The State Auditor adds a fiscal impact statement. For an initiative changing state law to be placed on the ballot, signatures must be obtained from registered voters equal to five percent of the total votes cast in the last gubernatorial election in six of Missouri's nine congressional districts. For an initiative changing the state constitution to be placed on the ballot, signatures are needed from registered voters equal to eight percent of the votes cast in the last gubernatorial election in six of the state's nine congressional districts. In 2002, 32 initiative petitions were approved for circulation and three were returned with signatures for approval. Two were ultimately certified for the November 2002 ballot. The elections division also oversees the collection of signatures for new political parties and the nomination of independent candidates for offices that file with the Secretary of State.

Missouri has nearly 3.7 million registered voters, and in the 2002 November general election, 1.9 million voters went to the polls.

In addition to assisting the 116 local election authorities interpret and administer state election laws; the Secretary of State promulgates rules governing elections and electronic voting systems. The Secretary of State is required to publish the Missouri election laws for use by county clerks and election boards. Additionally, the office produces various election materials including instructions for poll workers, calendars of annual election deadlines, a web site, training videos, and a manual for election authorities. The office cooperates with other officials, schools, and civic organizations to provide materials to support voter registration, responsibility and education. A high priority of the Secretary of State is to work with local election officials, the media and other groups to increase voter participation.

The Secretary of State is responsible for bringing Missouri into compliance with federal law, specifically the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA). HAVA requires changes in the way Missouri conducts elections, including accessible voting equipment, increased training for election officials, poll workers and voters, and an interactive, computerized voter registration database. Revisions to Missouri's current system will improve the ability of local election

The Secretary of State is responsible for ensuring compliance with state securities laws through activities of the Securities Division. This responsibility includes enforcement of the law when violations occur, the regulation of investment sales through registration of securities, broker-dealers, agents, investment advisers and investment adviser representatives. State securities laws are often referred to as the "Blue Sky Law" and are intended to protect investors from fraudulent investment schemes. The Secretary of State appoints the Securities Commissioner, who administers these laws.

The enforcement section receives and investigates complaints from Missouri investors. A toll-free Investor Hotline (800-721-7996) is maintained so investors can report complaints or make inquiries about members of the securities business. Each year the office initiates around 200 investigations, many of which result in cease and desist orders, licensing revocations, civil injunctions and penalties, or criminal prosecutions. Criminal securities violations are referred to the attorney general or local prosecutors. Assistance is also provided to federal prosecutors. The audit unit of the enforcement section performs random examinations of the offices of broker-dealers and investment advisers to ensure compliance with the Missouri securities laws.

Through registration of investments and members of the securities industry the securities division collected $11.92 million in revenues for the State of Missouri during the 2003 fiscal year, which ended June 30, 2003.

The licensing unit of the registration section regulates the registration of individuals and companies engaged in the securities business. As of June 30, 2003 there were 91,628 agents, 1,696 broker-dealers, 1,195 investment advisers, and 4,686 investment adviser representatives registered in Missouri. Prior to granting each registration an application review process is conducted to determine if applicants are sufficiently qualified to participate in the securities business. The registration section also reviews proposed securities offerings to ensure that Missouri approved offerings are "fair, just and equitable." The staff receives filings of federal covered securities and reviews requests for exemption from the registration provisions, provides interpretative opinions of the securities laws and assists Missouri issuers seeking small offerings with securities law compliance. In the 2003 fiscal year, the registration section staff received filings for 1,825 securities offerings.

The Office of the Secretary of State has an investor education program designed to assist both investors and future investors. The office is involved in educational programs with elementary, middle and high school students, and for seniors within the state. Free educational material is available to help investors protect themselves and members of their families.

Business Services Division

The Business Services Division has three sections: Commissions, Corporations and Uniform Commercial Code. The Corporations section has branch offices for corporate filings in St. Louis, Kansas City and Springfield. These offices are in contact with more than 350,000 customers each year and handle more than 800,000 transactions.

Commissions

The Secretary of State appoints and commissions notaries public. The section maintains the oath of office, official signature of each notary and the official bond. Missouri currently has over 72,000 notaries. The unit certifies over 10,000 notaries each year for foreign documents. They also certify elected officials and the State Registrar of Vital Statistics on over 2,000 documents. Many of these documents are for foreign adoptions.

One major responsibility of the Commissions section involves authenticating official acts of the Governor. Each year the section affixes the Great Seal of the State of Missouri to approximately 35,000 documents, which include: all commissions of state and county elected officials; appointments made by the Governor to fill vacancies in elected offices; boards and commissions; proclamations and executive orders issued by the Governor, extraditions, commutations of sentence and restoration of citizenship. The Commissions section maintains bonds and oaths of office for state officials.

The section also registers trademarks and service marks and keeps a registry of all marks. There are currently over 12,000 trademarks and service marks registered.

The section is also responsible for facsimile signature filings, resident agent filings, and service of process.

The Secretary of State is responsible for the registration of all Missouri and out-of-state business entities doing business in Missouri. These business entities include for profit and nonprofit corporations, specialized business entities, such as professional corporations, close corporations, agricultural cooperatives, mutual associations as well as limited liability companies, limited partnerships, limited liability partnerships, limited liability limited partnerships and many others. Missouri corporations must file articles of incorporation, while out-of-state corporations must obtain a certificate of authority. In addition, all corporations must file various documents required by law, such as annual reports, amendments, mergers, consolidations and articles of dissolution, terminations and withdrawals.

To remain in good standing with the Secretary of State, each corporation must annually register with the Corporations section the names of its officers and directors. Starting in January of 2003, this filing may now be completed online through the Internet 24 hours a day. In the first six months of offering this service, over 30,000 annual registration reports were filed online.

There are approximately 270,000 active corporations now doing business in Missouri and 467,000 inactive corporations on file. Annually more than 20,000 new corporations, 700 new limited partnerships, 16,000 new limited liability companies, and 700 limited liability partnerships are filed with the Corporations section. The section also handles each year more than 20,000 new fictitious name registrations, 4,500 amendments, 4,500 voluntary dissolutions, 4,000 mergers and processes more than 180,000 annual reports. These documents are sometimes used for real estate closings, opening bank accounts and court cases.

The Corporations section has been imaging the annual registration reports since January 1999, and since May 2003, with the implementation of a new computer system, every filed document is imaged and available online from the website. The Secretary of State's website can be used to file annual reports online, obtain a good standing online, print copies of available filed

The Uniform Commercial Code section has a new uniform model law, which went into effect July 1, 2001 and was adopted in all 50 states. The new UCC law created a centralized office, which is the Secretary of State, for the perfecting of personal liens and all business and professional loans. These loans are perfected by filing a financial statement on the accepted national form indicating the debtor name and address and the secured party name and address along with a description of the collateral. These financing statements are effective for five years and may be continued for an additional five-year term by filing a continuation statement within six months prior to expiration on the appropriate accepted national form. The section also processes information and copy requests on UCC filings.

The UCC section in July 2001 implemented a new computer system which allows for electronic filings and electronic searching on all UCC information available on the Secretary of State's website. Since the implementation of the new law, more than 300,000 filings have been filed. Currently 50% of the UCC filings received are filed online electronically. Also available on the website is the accepted paper forms and fee schedule for UCC filings. Effective September 1, 2003 the filing fee for electronic filing will be decreased by $7 to encourage the use of the electronic technology available.

The Records Services Division is responsible for managing both current and historical records of the state to ensure those records are accessible to Missouri citizens. It is also responsible for assisting local governments in records preservation and management.

The Missouri State Archives is the official repository for government records of permanent value. Its mission is to foster an appreciation of Missouri history and illuminate contemporary public issues by preserving and making available the state's permanent records to its citizens and their government.

Records in the Archives' holdings date from 1770 to the present. They include executive, legislative, and judicial records; records of state departments and agencies; Missouri's history under French and Spanish colonial and U.S. territorial rule; military records from the War of 1812 through WWI; the region's role in the nineteenth century fur trade and America's westward expansion; trademarks and business records; and women and African-American history.

Holdings currently total more than 150 million pages of paper; 250,000 photographs; 60,000 reels of microfilm, and 185,000 microfiche. The Missouri State Archives is one of the most used state repositories in the nation. While thousands of researchers visit or write the Archives each year, a dramatic upsurge in use has come from visits to the Missouri State Archives growing web pages—5.9 million in FY2003 (www.sos.mo.gov).

Over the last few years the Missouri State Archives has become involved in a number of important initiatives: The African-American History Initiative is designed to stimulate interest in African-American History through educational projects and the promotion of a broad awareness of the holdings of the Missouri State Archives. The Missouri State Archives has also played a leading role in the bicentennial commemoration of the Lewis and Clark Expedition. The Lewis and Clark Expedition and African-American history both play an important role in a third initiative, the St. Louis Circuit Court Records Project. Begun as a traditional archival project, this initiative is now part of a complex consortium. At the instigation of the Missouri State Archives, an academic advisory board, composed of scholars representing nine institutions help guide its work.

While the St. Louis Circuit Court records project is large, it is just one of many court projects currently being conducted across Missouri. The Archives preserves on microfilm the probate and circuit court records of Missouri's county courts. To date, the Archives has been involved in 407 preservation projects in 113 of 114 counties. There are currently seventy-two such projects, up from forty-six in the year 2000. The Missouri State Archives also partners with the Supreme Court of Missouri Historical Society, which funds two legal internships and a legal fellowship for the Archives.

The Archives is devoted to educating the public about materials in the Archives' holdings, as well as fostering an appreciation of Missouri's history. It accordingly provides programs for schools and civic groups, sponsors traveling exhibits based on its collections, offers tours, supports and maintains a regular calendar of monthly educational programs and historical entertainments. The "Friends of the Missouri State Archives," formed in 1989, which promote and support the Archives has underwritten many of the costs associated with these outreach activities. The State Archives also hosts student interns and practicum students from Missouri colleges and universities; create historical exhibits, offer a public speakers series, sponsor regional National History Day activities; and provide tours and talks for school and civic organizations.

Volunteers are an important resource of the Missouri State Archives. In Jefferson City they provide invaluable assistance to the staff, helping with reference services, acting as docents. Across Missouri volunteers help process county and court records, and special collections. More novel is the Archives innovative, "e-volunteer" program in which the Archives provides volunteers from across the nation photocopies, microfilm, or digital images of records to be indexed or transcribed from their homes. Completed transcriptions are posted online providing greater access to the collection.

Access to the Archives is provided through the research room. The reference staff answers written requests. Hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday and 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Thursday. Saturday hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

The mission of the Records Management Division is to promote the efficiency and continuity of government, document the rights of Missouri citizens, hold state officials accountable for their actions, and preserve Missouri's heritage by providing state agencies with the necessary instruments to develop effective and efficient information control. To achieve this mission, the division is divided into three sections: Records Management Services, State Records Center, and Imaging Services.

Sound records management programs consist of a planned and coordinated set of policies, procedures, and activities to manage recorded information. Records Management assists state government through a variety of services to agencies, including consultation and technical advice; microfilm processing, duplicating and quality control; and storage of semi-active and inactive records.

The State Records Center provides state agencies with a storage solution for inactive records. Inactive records are those with a reference rate that does not warrant retention in expensive agency office or storage space. Based on a formula derived from the National Archives, this practice has saved Missouri taxpayers more than $32 million. Records Center services include pick-up, delivery, and destruction of agency records. All records remain in the legal custody of the transferring agency and access to stored documents is restricted to the agency's authorized personnel. The transferring of inactive files to the Records Center allows agencies to free up office space and equipment. There is no cost to state agencies for these services. Currently, 240,000 cubic feet of records are stored in the State Records Center's three facilities.

Imaging Services provides micrographics services to state agencies and local governments. Agencies can reduce the volume of, improve access to, and ensure archival preservation for their records by utilizing these services. Micrographics services include microfilming, processing, quality control, and silver and diazo microfilm duplication. The unit provides secure protection for silver original microfilm within a climate-controlled vault.

State Records Commission

Chapter 109.250 RSMo established the State Records Commission. The commission's task is to guide the records management program in the determination of retention periods for all records in the executive branch of state government. Currently, more than 900 state agencies, commissions, bureaus and boards operate under approved record retention schedules. Additionally, the commission reviews, approves, and recommends guidelines for the management of electronic records generated by the state of Missouri.

Missouri's Local Records Preservation program is an effort to improve long-term local public record management by advising, educating, and encouraging the custodians of those records in the use of sound records management and archival practices. Archivists provide their expertise to local government officials on the retention of records. A part time local records and analyst program began in 1986. In 1989 legislation converted this to a full time program. Through the local records program documents of great historical value have been identified and preserved and the State Archives reference collections have been dramatically enhanced. All records are more accessible to the public because they are properly organized and in many places space in public buildings is freed up for other purposes.

More than 3,500 governmental entities can receive assistance-managing records. There are 11 field archivists located around Missouri. Local officials in every county of the state have been assisted.

The Missouri Local Records Grant program began in 1991 and is funded through a fee placed on documents filed with county recorders. In FY 2002, the Secretary of State, with the advice of the Missouri Historical Records Advisory Board, awarded $397,000 in grant funds to 69 projects. For FY 2003 $369,000 was awarded to 54 projects. Approximately 70 percent of the funds will be used for microfilming local permanent records to ensure their preservation. The grants require local matches.

Records conservation staff provides an advisory service to local government offices on all aspects of record care and preservation, as well as advice on disaster recovery.

A Local Records Board reviews and makes decisions on retention schedules for records of local governments.

In 1907, the General Assembly created the Missouri State Library Commission, which promoted the development of libraries across the state. Under Missouri's new constitution in 1945, the commission went out of existence and the Missouri State Library was put under the Department of Higher Education. Legislation passed in 1991 moved the State Library from the Department of Higher Education to the Office of the Secretary of State, effective July 1, 1993.

Responsibilities of the Missouri State Library are to: provide library and reference services to Missouri state government; provide library services to the blind and physically handicapped; and promote the development and improvement of library services throughout the state.

Reference Services

Telephone: (573) 751-3615 / FAX: (573) 526-1142

The Reference Services section delivers library services to meet the informational and research needs of state government. This objective is achieved through current awareness, library materials collections in multiple formats, monthly publications and online databases provided at the state employee's desktop.

Keeping Up, a daily newspaper clipping summary of news about the activities and operation of state government, is distributed electronically to the legislature and state agencies. Table of Contents service allows state employees to receive the table of contents and full text articles from periodicals that assist in the performance of their duties. It is distributed electronically as the current periodicals become available on the statewide periodicals database. Info-to-Go, a subject bibliography of periodical articles, and Missouri State Government Publications, a bibliography of state publications, are published monthly on the Secretary of State's website.

To support the research work done for state government, the State Library maintains a materials collection of 50,000 books, 436 magazine subscriptions, 24 newspaper subscriptions and 451,000 microfilm holdings of government documents, journals and newspapers. The State Library participates in MOBIUS, the statewide union catalog of academic libraries. State employees have access to MOBIUS collection through the State Library. In addition, Reference Services subscribes to a number of online databases geared to the needs of state government. Some of these databases are provided to state employees at their desktop.

The State Library is a congressionally designated library depository for the U.S. government publications. As a selective depository, over 100,000 documents are housed. The library is also the official depository for all state government publications and coordinates a network of Missouri libraries that serve the entire state as depositories for state government publications.

While the State Library is open for use by the general public, its research services and service-initiatives are directed to the members of the legislature and employees of the agencies of state government.

Library Development

The Library Development section supports libraries through consulting, administration of grant programs, continuing education and statewide programs. The consultant staff works with librarians and library governing boards to improve the quality of library service for all Missouri's citizens. Through research, publications and personal contacts consultants provide assistance on general library issues and needs, promote the organization and development of library services, manage statewide projects, and maintain statistics on library services in the state.

The State Library administers several programs to provide funds and services for libraries. State-funded programs include state aid for public libraries, both per capita funds and equalization payments to libraries in poor counties. The State Library also coordinates the funding for the REAL (Remote Electronic Access to Libraries) Project, which provides Internet access for public libraries through MOREnet. The federal Library Services and Technology Act provides grant money to fund libraries and statewide projects, including continuing education and training, interlibrary loan support and development of library service for seniors.

Ongoing projects include coordination of the Missouri Summer Reading Program; development of library literacy programs in libraries and coordination of literacy efforts with other state agencies and the statewide literacy center; workshops and training sessions; promotion of library services to seniors; publication of newsline, Missouri Census Update, Wolfner News, Missouri Library Directory, statistical reports and all State Library publications. It works intensively with local libraries on development and support of the use of technology to improve library services for Missourians.

As one of 29 state affiliates with the National Center for the Book in the Library of Congress, the Missouri Center for the Book promotes the state's book culture and library heritage.

The State Library also serves as the lead agency for the State Census Data Center program, a cooperative venture with the U.S. Census Bureau.

Wolfner Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped serves as the public library for Missourians unable to use standard print because of a visual or physical disability. The library loans a half million books and magazines in Braille, recorded cassette, and large print, from its collection of more than 300,000 volumes. Playback machines are also loaned to users of the recorded materials.

More than 12,000 individuals and 983 institutions, i.e., nursing homes, schools, hospitals, hospices, etc., use the library. In addition to the circulation of books and magazines, Wolfner provides reference and information services, children's programming, interlibrary loan, a newsletter, catalogs and bibliographies, descriptive videos and access to the collection via an online public access catalog (OPAC).

Wolfner services are available to qualified Missourians at no charge. Applications for service are available directly from the library, a local Missouri public library, or on the Secretary of State web site. Wolfner is Missouri's regional library in the national network of libraries serving individuals who are blind and disabled, in cooperation with the National Library Service of the Library of Congress.

The Wolfner Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped has a rich history of library service, predating the Missouri State Library and the Library of Congress network. Loaning Braille books to a multi-state region in 1924, Wolfner became one of the first 13 regional libraries for the blind designated by the Library of Congress. Named in memory of noted ophthalmologist Henry L. Wolfner and originally administered by the St. Louis Public Library, Wolfner became part of the Missouri State Library in 1977, and physically moved to Jefferson City in 1985.

Administrative Services Division

The Administrative Services Division functions to meet several statutory and public service requirements of the Secretary of State's office. Fiscal management, budget development, facilities management and human resources management are responsibilities of this division. It has two sections.

Fiscal

The Fiscal section was established to ensure efficient and effective internal financial operations. The unit supports the Office of the Secretary of State funding, processing vendor payments, purchasing and preparing financial reports for each division of the office.

Human Resources

The Human Resources section was established to ensure efficient and effective personnel recruitment, benefits, training, and performance evaluation for all divisions. This section also handles compensation for all employees on a twice-a-month payroll system.

Administrative Rules Division

Kirkpatrick State Information Center
600 W. Main, PO Box 1767
Jefferson City 65102
Telephone: (573) 751-4015 / FAX: (573) 751-3032

The Administrative Rules Division has published administrative rules or law since 1976. As the legislature enacts laws, 189 Missouri agencies promulgate rules to implement those laws. The Office of the Secretary of State publishes the Missouri Register twice a month to keep Missourians informed of those laws and any changes to existing laws; and publishes the Code of State Regulations once monthly to complete these rules for codification into the Code of State Regulations.

The Missouri Register contains emergency, proposed, and final orders of rulemaking. The emergency rules are effective for a limited period of time. Proposed rules cannot go into effect until citizens have had an opportunity to attend a public hearing and/or submit written comments to proposed rules or rule changes. All state agencies must summarize public comments and the agency's changes, if any, to the proposed rule in subsequent editions of the Missouri Register, which are then published. After the rules have been adopted, they are codified and printed in the Code of State Regulations.

The Code is a 14-volume loose-leaf set of rulemakings containing approximately 10,000 pages of published administrative law, rules, and is updated monthly. A cross-index to the Revised Statutes of Missouri and the corresponding rule number is part of the Code, as is a subject index. The Code and Register are available on the Secretary of State's website. Plans are currently underway to make the Code and Register searchable for specific subject matter, rule number or specific law or rule and to provide e-mail notification of rule filings by rule number or subject matter. Future plans call for further methods to automate the rulemaking process.

The staff of the Administrative Rules Division is also charged by the Revised Statutes of Missouri to set uniform standards, procedures and guidelines for the preparation and publishing of rules in the Missouri Register and the Code of State Regulations. Therefore, the division also publishes Rulemaking 1-2-3, Missouri Style, which is a user's guide for the proper preparation and filing of all types of rulemakings.

The Publications section handles a variety of printing and graphic arts responsibilities for the Office of the Secretary of State.

By law, the Secretary of State is authorized to publish the Official Manual of the State of Missouri. Chapter 11 of the Missouri Revised Statutes governs the production, content and distribution of the Official Manual; the Publications section carries out these requirements. The section compiles information and photographs from every area of state government, edits the material and compiles it in finished form. The Official Manual is produced biennially in odd-numbered years.

Publications staff prepare other publications, including the Missouri Roster, General Assembly Roster, Missouri Constitution, Missouri Election Laws Handbook, Missouri Notary Public Handbook, newsline and other various newsletters and forms.

Information Technology

This section coordinates the development and implementation of information technology to ensure the efficient and effective use of technology throughout the office. This unit is also responsible for developing the Secretary of State's website to make sure as much information as possible is available through the Internet.

Mailroom

Mailroom section provides mail delivery within agencies, shipping and receiving support. The mailroom also houses a supply area for use by all personnel.

Claire McCaskill

State Auditor

Elected November 5, 2002
Term expires January 2007

CLAIRE McCASKILL (Democrat), began her second term as Missouri's 34th State Auditor in 2003, by continuing to commission groundbreaking financial and performance audits of all state-funded institutions, state agencies and most counties. Many of the notable audits undertaken by the State Auditor's Office reviewed the effectiveness of child care programs, education funding, senior health initiatives, and efforts to meet state transportation needs. Since 1999, the State Auditor and her staff have released hundreds of useful audit reports to the public, lawmakers and government officials, which can be accessed at www.auditor.state.mo.us

A state audit of Missouri's foster care system pointed out the need for better management in order to ensure children are safe. McCaskill's audit of child support collections found that at one time the state had left over $1 billion uncollected. Her look into childcare facilities found that state child care bureau officials do not know how many unlicensed providers operate in Missouri.

In addition, McCaskill authorized audits of domestic violence shelters and the state's child abuse hotline. The domestic violence report cited more than 5,000 victims turned away from shelters throughout Missouri, even though more monies were available to help. Conversely, the child abuse audit found it sometimes difficult for the state to remove children from dangerous settings and financial support lacking.

With budget cuts threatening education operations, the State Auditor's Office examined the issuance of student loans as well as university and college tuition rates throughout Missouri. Meanwhile, reviews of elementary and secondary education found unequal per pupil funding among Missouri school districts and problems across the state recruiting and retaining teachers.

Noticing most public bonds were privately placed, McCaskill commissioned an audit of general obligation bonds registered with her office. The audit concluded public school districts, and other taxing authorities, paid more than $83 million in excess interest costs over a three-year period by not conducting open competitive bond sales.

As requested by McCaskill, the State Auditor's Office conducted an audit of the Division of Aging which found more than a thousand employees caring for Missouri nursing home residents who were forbidden to work with children and the mentally handicapped. State lawmakers passed legislation prohibiting the dangerous double standard, and McCaskill was called to testify on her audit's findings before the United States Senate Special Committee on Aging.

McCaskill was the first auditor to aggressively enforce provisions of the Hancock Amendment that afford protection to Missourians from being overcharged on their property taxes.

The Missouri Press Association's Sunshine Award was presented to Auditor McCaskill for her establishment of audits, at all levels of government, questioning information access costs and compliance to Missouri's Sunshine Law. McCaskill was also awarded the State Employment Advocate Award for her commitment to hiring and retaining minorities.

Claire attended the University of Missouri-Columbia graduating in 1975 with a B.S. in political science. She is also a graduate of the University of Missouri Law School.

In 1982, she was elected to the Missouri House of Representatives where she later chaired the House Civil and Criminal Justice Committee, along with serving on the Budget Committee and Judiciary Committee. Claire was also the first woman to give birth as a state lawmaker.

While serving as a county lawmaker, in 1992 Claire was the first woman to be elected Jackson County Prosecutor, the largest prosecutor's office in the state, she was re-elected again in 1996.

As a result of her work Claire has held a variety of national and state leadership positions including Founding Member and Chairman of the National Association of Drug Court Professionals, Vice President of the National District Attorney's Association, President of Missouri's Association of Prosecuting Attorneys, and Member of the White House Commission for Drug Free Communities.

In April 2002, Claire married St. Louis businessman Joseph Shepard. Together, they have seven children.

MICHELLE THOMPSON, CPA
Deputy State Auditor

PEG GUSTAFSON
General Counsel

The state auditor's office is Missouri's independent watchdog agency, charged with auditing all state agencies, boards and commissions; the state court system; and the 90 counties in Missouri that do not have a county auditor. The state auditor may also be called on to audit local units of government by citizen petition.

The office is recognized by the Missouri State Board of Accountancy as a certified public accounting firm and the time auditors spend working for the office counts toward the two years mandatory experience required for CPA licensure in Missouri.

Audits are performed to determine if tax dollars are being spent efficiently, economically and legally and to determine how well governmental units and agencies protect against fraud and abuse of the public funds under their control. Approximately 200 state agencies and programs, the state's 45 judicial circuits (including approximately 400 municipal divisions) and 89 counties must be regularly audited by the state auditor. Approximately 20 audits of local government entities, petitioned by local voters, are performed each year.

In addition to fulfilling the primary auditing duties of the office, the state auditor designs accounting systems for state and local governments, approves depositaries selected by the state treasurer and serves as a member of the Board of Fund Commissioners and the State Records Commission. The state auditor also examines and registers general obligation bonds issued by political subdivisions of the state to ensure that each one complies with state law and reviews all property tax rates set by local political subdivisions.

The powers of the state auditor are constitutional, derived from Article IV, Section 13 of the Missouri Constitution. Legal duties are detailed in Chapter 29 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri.

Organization

The deputy state auditor works with the state auditor in developing office policies, supervising special projects and consulting with directors concerning the day-to-day operations of the office. The assistant to the deputy state auditor reviews all audit reports and consults with the audit directors on all fraud-related audits. Four directors aid the state auditor. The director of administration works with areas such as personnel recruiting, budget preparation and staff assignment. Three audit directors supervise the work of audit managers in charge of auditing various aspects of government operations or government agencies and units. The managers review audit reports before the audits are delivered to the state auditor for final review and approval.

In addition to coordinating audits, audit managers also track changes in policies and laws affecting the agencies or areas of government for which they are responsible, so the state auditor's office can revise audit plans or priorities as needed to review compliance.

Individual audits are supervised by an auditor-in-charge, who normally is a senior auditor. Audit fieldwork is performed by senior auditors, semi-senior auditors and audit assistants.

Approximately 165 persons are employed by the state auditor's office. The audit staff is composed of nearly 135 employees, about 65 percent of whom are CPAs. That figure represents a marked increase from earlier years; in 1974 only about 10 percent of the staff were CPAs.

The office hires only degreed auditors, recruiting on the campuses of Missouri colleges and universities. Most recruits are native Missourians. Audit staff members are hired on the basis of professional and academic qualifications.

Types of Audits

The state auditor's office performs financial and compliance audits, which also include reviews of management practices. Financial records of auditees are examined to determine how the funds under the auditee's control were actually recorded and spent. The systems and controls the auditee uses to protect funds and property against fraud, waste and abuse are checked. The auditee's compliance with constitutional provisions, laws, legislative appropriation levels and administrative rules is also reviewed. Management practices are reviewed for efficiency and accountability.

Audits are conducted in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards. Completed financial audits contain a formal opinion from the state auditor regarding the fair presentation of financial statements. A management advisory report listing any management weaknesses disclosed during the audit is also included. Findings and recommendations in the management advisory report are reviewed with the auditee at an exit conference prior to the release of the audit so the responses from the auditee to the recommendations may be printed in the final report.

The state auditor performs special reviews and audits of selected programs or agencies when needed.

The state auditor works closely with other audit agencies and offices at the local, state and national level. This is done to avoid duplication of effort in the audits of programs that may receive funding from several sources.

Citizen Awareness

Information from citizens, legislators and government employees aid the state auditor when performing special reviews and audits.

Citizens are urged to contact the state auditor if they have information they feel would be useful to auditors performing the audits. All sources of information are kept confidential. Citizens can contact the state auditor's office by calling the toll-free Government Waste Hotline at (800) 347-8597, or through our website at www.auditor.state.mo.us.

Public Information

All audit reports produced by the state auditor's office are public documents after they have been signed by the state auditor. Reports dealing with state agencies are provided to the press corps covering the state Capitol and to any regional or local newspaper, radio or television station requesting a copy. Audits dealing with county or local government are delivered to the media in that area. Reports are also delivered to the Missouri State Library and are available through the state's library system. Citizens may request copies of any audit report by writing PO Box 869, Jefferson City 65102, or calling (573) 751-4213.

Nancy Farmer

State Treasurer

Elected November 7, 2000
Term expires January 2005

NANCY FARMER (Democrat), became Missouri's 43rd State Treasurer when she took the oath of office on the steps of the state Capitol January 8, 2001. She is the first woman to serve as Missouri's chief financial officer in the state's 180-year history.

As Missouri State Treasurer, Farmer is responsible for managing the state's $19 billion in annual revenues; overseeing the state's banking services; managing Missouri's $3.1 billion investment portfolio; serving as trustee for more than $220 million in unclaimed property; and administering the state's $350 million MISSOURI FIRST Linked Deposit Program.

Treasurer Farmer brought prior experience to the office, having served as assistant state treasurer before becoming a candidate for State Treasurer. She is committed to making the Missouri State Treasurer's Office one of the most innovative and dynamic treasury offices in the nation. She is pledged to sound investment policies that maximize the state's return on investments without compromising the safety of the public's funds.

State Treasurer Farmer serves as chair of the Missouri Saving for Tuition or MO$T program, which she helped develop while serving as assistant state treasurer. MO$T encourages Missouri families to save for higher education while taking advantage of significant federal and state tax benefits.

Treasurer Farmer also oversees the Dollar$ & $ense bank-at-school program, a program that partners local banks and elementary schools to help teach students about the importance of setting goals and saving for the future. In addition, she serves on the management boards of the Missouri Housing Development Commission, the Missouri State Employees' Retirement System and the Board of Fund Commissioners, which oversees state debt issuance.

Treasurer Farmer has a long history of public service with an emphasis on public finance issues. Her involvement in St. Louis civic issues led her to become executive director of a nonprofit neighborhood housing and development cooperative. She later served as director of intergovernmental affairs for the City of St. Louis.

She was elected state representative in 1992 from the 64th District in the City of St. Louis, and was re-elected twice. During her tenure in the legislature, Farmer chaired the powerful Ways and Means Committee and served on both the Budget and the Operations and Finance committees.

As chair of Ways and Means, Rep. Farmer led the effort to eliminate the state sales tax on groceries, one of the largest and most equitable permanent tax cuts in Missouri's history. She also worked to enact the Historic Preservation Tax Credit Program, which has spurred billions of dollars in investment and redevelopment across the state.

Born in 1956, Nancy Farmer was raised in Jacksonville, Illinois, and graduated from Illinois College in 1979. She also studied at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government in 1998. She is married to Darrell Hartke, an industrial-organizational psychologist. They make their home in the City of St. Louis.

Duties

The State Treasurer is Missouri state government's chief financial officer. The treasurer's office manages Missouri's $19 billion in annual state revenues; directs the state's banking services; and manages Missouri's $3.1 billion investment portfolio. The office safeguards more than $220 million in unclaimed assets that have been turned over to the state by banks, businesses, insurance companies and government agencies, and tries to locate the rightful owners. The state treasurer also serves on the management boards of a number of public entities.

The state treasurer is one of six statewide elected officials, and serves a term of four years. A person may only serve as state treasurer for two terms.

Banking Services

The state treasurer serves as Missouri government's banking director. While not a bank itself, the treasurer's office must authorize payments and balance accounts. To protect taxpayers' money, the State Treasurer maintains a separate accounting system to provide a check and balance on the state accounting system, and distributes investment earnings to the proper funds.

The office contracts with Missouri banks to process the state's receipts and disbursements; handle money and security transfers; report on the state's accounts, balances and payment activities; and provide related banking services such as data processing. Bidding for state banking services contracts is open to all Missouri banks.

Investments

The state treasurer determines the amount of state funds not needed for current operating expenses and invests those funds in interest-bearing time deposits in Missouri banks, U.S. treasury and federal agency securities, repurchase agreements, banker's acceptances and top-rated commercial paper. Safety is the treasurer's number one priority in the investment of the public's funds. Staff investment specialists monitor major investment markets and work to maximize the state's return on investments without compromising safety. The office has an average of $3.1 billion invested daily, earning the state millions of dollars in interest income each year.

Missouri First Linked Deposit Program

A portion of the state's investable funds can be used by the Treasurer to help Missouri industries create jobs, to help small businesses grow, to help farmers prosper, and to bring affordable housing within reach of more Missouri families.

Under the MISSOURI FIRST program, the treasurer's office is authorized to place up to $350 million in state funds in Missouri financial institutions and accept a below-market rate of return. The institutions pass on the savings in the form of low-interest loans for agriculture, job creation, small business, drought relief, and affordable multi-family housing.

Unclaimed Property

The treasurer's office is responsible for Missouri's largest "lost and found," the state's Unclaimed Property program. State law requires financial institutions, insurance companies, public agencies and other business entities to turn over assets that belong to a customer, client, employee or other rightful owner if there have been no documented transactions or contact with the owner for five or more years. The treasurer's office operates an aggressive program to return unclaimed assets to the original owners or their legal heirs.

Most unclaimed property consists of cash from bank accounts, stocks, bonds, and contents of safe deposit boxes that have been abandoned. It also can include uncollected insurance policy proceeds, government refunds, utility deposits and wages from past jobs. The Unclaimed Property section does not handle real property such as land, houses, cars and boats.

The office currently is holding more than $220 million in unclaimed property and funds in more than 1.5 million owner accounts. All unclaimed property is held in trust by the state forever and can be claimed at any time. To recover unclaimed property, claimants must be either the original owner of the property or a legal heir. All services of the Unclaimed Property program are free of charge.

People can check to see if the Treasurer's Office is holding unclaimed property that may belong to them using its searchable database at www.showmemoney.com.

Dollar$ & $ense

Dollar$ & $ense, created in 1995, is a statewide bank-at-school program available to Missouri elementary schools to teach children to make informed decisions as savers, spenders, borrowers and money managers. It is a partnership program of the State Treasurer's Office, local Missouri financial institutions, the Missouri Council on Economic Education, the Missouri Bankers Association and the Consumer Credit Counseling Service of the Mississippi River Valley.

Participating schools are provided with program curricula and partnered with a local bank. The bankers arrange in-school banking hours to accept deposits into student accounts. They work with teachers to provide opportunities for students to learn and practice money management skills.

Missouri Saving for Tuition (MO$T)

The state treasurer chairs the Missouri Saving for Tuition or MO$T board. Developed by the State Treasurer's Office in 1999, the MO$T program encourages Missouri families to save for higher education while taking advantage of significant federal and state tax benefits. Accounts can be opened with as little as $25 or $15 through payroll deduction. Contributions of up to $8,000 annually can be deducted from Missouri income taxes and all earnings are free of state and federal income taxes. Funds from MO$T accounts can be used to pay for all eligible educational expenses at virtually any two- or four-year college or university, vocational, technical or professional school anywhere in the country.

MO$T accounts are managed by TIAA-CREF, one of the world's largest and most respected financial management firms. For more information about MO$T, call toll free: 1-888-414-MOST, or visit the web site at www.missourimost.org.

Boards and Commissions

The state treasurer serves on the governing boards of three large public entities: the Missouri Housing Development Commission, which assists in the creation of affordable housing for low- and moderate-income Missourians; Missouri State Employees' Retirement System, which manages retirement funds for more than 56,000 state employees and retirees; and Board of Fund Commissioners, which issues, redeems and cancels state general obligation bonds and other debt. She also serves on the boards of the Missouri Investment Trust and the Missouri Historical Society.

Jeremiah W. Nixon

Attorney General

Elected November 7, 2000
Term expires January 2005

JAY NIXON (Democrat) is serving his third term as Attorney General of Missouri. Nixon was first elected Attorney General on Nov. 3, 1992, on a platform of fighting crime, cleaning up government corruption, and protecting consumers and the environment. Nixon is Missouri's 40th Attorney General.

As Attorney General, Nixon serves as the state's chief legal officer, working with law enforcement daily to fight crime and prosecute criminals. He has been a leader nationally in criminal law and victims' rights issues and successfully worked for the reform of Missouri juvenile laws to protect society and to instill more accountability in the juvenile justice system.

One of the most popular and successful programs instituted by Attorney General Nixon has been the state's No Call program. More than 2.9 million Missourians are a part of the No Call list, which reduces unwanted telemarketing calls. Nixon also has recovered more than $1 million from telemarketers who violated the No Call law. The Missouri No Call program has been held up as a model for other states starting their own programs.

Nixon's landmark victory in the United States Supreme Court in Nixon v. Shrink reinstated Missouri's campaign contribution limits and cleared the way nationally for campaign finance reform. In two other cases of significance, Nixon's work in the Blue Cross and Blue Shield and the Health Midwest cases have resulted in the formation of the state's two largest health-care foundations, which will use more than $1.5 billion to help provide health-care services to underserved populations of the state. Litigation by Nixon against tobacco companies for illegally marketing cigarettes to young people resulted in the largest settlement in the history of the state.

Nixon has been a national leader in fighting crime on the Internet, obtaining convictions and restitution from those who have defrauded Missourians through Internet scams and establishing through court rulings that Missouri laws can be enforced on the Internet.

As Attorney General, Nixon obtained $12 million for Missourians in 2001-2002 from companies and individuals accused of fraudulent activities, including $5 million returned to consumers by the Consumer Protection Division through out-of-court mediation. Nixon's actions to protect the elderly have put telemarketers in prison and fraudulent sweepstakes companies out of business.

As Attorney General, Nixon created the Environmental Protection Division to enforce Missouri's environmental laws. Successful litigation by the division has resulted in the cleanup of polluted sites and millions of dollars awarded to the state. Nixon also has led the fight to protect the state's interests in the management of the Missouri River as well as to preserve some of the state's most valuable natural resources, such as Church Mountain and the waterways of the White River basin.

Nixon's aggressive actions in the Attorney General's Office have earned him national recognition. Barrister magazine named him one of the 20 outstanding young lawyers in the nation, and the Missouri Jaycees selected him one of Ten Outstanding Young Missourians.

Prior to becoming Attorney General, Nixon served as a state senator for six years where he was recognized by the Conservation Federation of Missouri for his environmental work.

Attorney General Nixon is a native of De Soto, Missouri. He earned his political science and law degrees from the University of Missouri–Columbia in 1978 and 1981, respectively. He was in private practice when he was elected to the Senate in 1986. He is married to Georganne Wheeler Nixon; they have two children, Jeremiah and Will.

The attorney general is the attorney for the state, representing the legal interests of Missouri and its state agencies.

As the state's chief legal officer, the attorney general must prosecute or defend all appeals to which the state is a party, including every felony criminal case appealed to the Missouri Supreme Court and courts of appeal. The attorney general also is required to institute, in the name and on behalf of the state, all civil suits and other proceedings that are necessary to protect the state's rights, interests or claims. The attorney general may appear, interplead, answer or defend any proceedings that involve the state's interests, or appear on behalf of the state in declaratory judgment proceedings when the constitutionality of a statute is challenged.

The attorney general also renders official opinions to the executive and legislative branch and the county prosecuting attorneys on questions of law relating to their duties. The attorney general may institute quo warranto proceedings against anyone unlawfully holding office or move to oust any public official for malfeasance in office.

The attorney general's office was created in 1806 when Missouri was part of the Louisiana Territory. Missouri's first Constitution in 1820 provided for an appointed attorney general, but since the 1865 Constitution, the attorney general has been elected.

By law, the attorney general is a member of the Board of Fund Commissioners, the Board of Public Buildings, the Governor's Committee on Interstate Cooperation, the Missouri Highway Reciprocity Commission and the Missouri Housing Development Commission.

To fulfill these and other responsibilities, the attorney general's office is organized into eight divisions.

Consumer Protection Division

The attorney general has the responsibility of protecting the public's interests in an open and honest marketplace. The Consumer Protection Division enforces Missouri's Consumer Protection Act and antitrust laws, and has the responsibility of representing the commissioner of securities of the secretary of state's office.

Missouri's consumer protection statutes prohibit deception, fraud, unfair practices and misrepresentation or concealment of material facts in the sale or advertisement of goods or services. These laws authorize the attorney general to take action against Internet fraud, stop the promotion of pyramid sales schemes, prevent the altering of vehicle odometers and ensure that consumers' rights are protected under laws dealing with home solicitations. The division also has an active consumer education program.

Consumers who wish to file complaints or obtain information may call the attorney general's Consumer Hotline at (800) 392-8222 or go online to www.moago.org. The division receives more than 30,000 consumer complaints a year. Under the Missouri Antitrust Law, the attorney general has the authority to represent the state or any of its political subdivisions, public agencies, school districts or municipalities in actions to prohibit monopolies and trade restraints. The attorney general also may act under federal antitrust statutes to bring civil actions in the name of the state and on behalf of Missouri residents to recover damages for injuries caused by certain antitrust violations.

The attorney general is the state's chief prosecutor for securities fraud, and may initiate legal actions for civil injunctive relief, penalties and restitution under the Missouri Merchandising Practices Law.

The No Call program to reduce telemarketing calls also is under the Consumer Protection Division. Missourians may register for No Call by calling 1-866 NO CALL 1 or by going online to www.moago.org.

Criminal Division

The attorney general represents the state in every felony case appealed to the Supreme Court of Missouri and Missouri Court of Appeals and also defends the state in all habeas corpus actions filed by prison inmates in state and federal courts. Each year, attorneys in the Criminal Division brief and argue more than 700 cases in the Missouri Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court of Missouri and litigate some 500 federal habeas corpus actions in the federal district courts, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, and the U.S. Supreme Court. Division attorneys also assist with extraditions to and from Missouri of those charged in criminal cases.

Public Safety Division

The Public Safety Division is involved in a wide range of criminal prosecutions at the trial level. The division's special prosecution unit prosecutes or assists in the prosecution of cases throughout Missouri, many of them homicide cases. The meth prosecution unit specializes in handling criminal cases involving the manufacture, sale or possession of methamphetamine.

The workers' compensation fraud unit prosecutes fraud or misconduct involving workers' compensation, and the Medicaid fraud control unit prosecutes cases involving fraud of the state Medicaid program by health professionals, or abuse or neglect of Medicaid recipients by caregivers.

The division's high technology and computer crime unit assists local law enforcement with investigations and prosecutions of computer and Internet crime cases.

The sexually violent predator unit seeks the civil commitment of sexual predators who suffer from a mental abnormality making them more likely than not to commit additional predatory acts of sexual violence.

Attorneys in the division also serve as legal counsel for the Department of Public Safety, Highway Patrol, Water Patrol and other state law enforcement agencies, and represent those agencies in all civil litigation in which they are a party.

Environmental Protection Division

The Environmental Protection Division takes legal action to stop pollution of the state's air, water and soil and penalize polluters through fines, penalties and, in the most serious cases, incarceration. The Attorney General has taken action in recent years to protect the state's interests in management of the Missouri River and to protect some of the state's most valuable resources, such as the waterways of the White River basin and Church Mountain.

Division attorneys represent the Department of Natural Resources and its constituent boards and commissions. The division is responsible for hundreds of active enforcement cases, including administrative appeals before civil commissions. Enforcement litigation is filed primarily in state courts to seek preliminary and permanent injunctions to assure compliance with Missouri's environmental laws. The division also obtains civil penalties and recovers costs and damages for the state. Division attorneys cooperate with the U.S. Attorney's office in the Environmental Crimes Task Force to enforce state and federal laws with civil and criminal penalties.

Governmental Affairs Division

The Governmental Affairs Division protects the safety and well-being of Missourians by ensuring that regulated professionals adhere to state laws and disciplinary rules, by enforcing state ethics and campaign finance laws, and by removing caregivers who abuse or neglect vulnerable citizens.

Division attorneys provide legal advice to the Department of Mental Health, the Department of Health and Senior Services, the Health Facilities Review Committee and more than 30 professional licensing boards including the Board of Registration for the Healing Arts, which regulates the practice of medicine. Attorneys in the division also address questions about Missouri's open meetings and records law, commonly known as the Sunshine Law.

Governmental Entities and Financial Services Division

The division represents or provides legal advice to state officers, including the governor, secretary of state, treasurer and auditor, as well as several state departments and agencies, such as Agriculture, Revenue and Social Services. Division attorneys also defend constitutional challenges to state laws and ballot issues.

Attorneys in this division protect Missourians by recouping money owed to the state, state officers or state agencies and by enforcing compliance with state laws by trusts, foundations and nonprofit corporations.

Labor Division

The Labor Division provides general counsel and litigation services for the Missouri Department of Labor and Industrial Relations and its officers and agencies. The division also represents the state in prevailing wage disputes, crime victims' claims and workers' compensation cases of state employees, including claims involving the Second Injury Fund. Labor Division attorneys represent individuals before the Missouri Human Rights Commission when they have discrimination claims involving employment, housing or public accommodations.

Litigation Division

Litigation Division attorneys handle major and complex litigation for Missouri, providing legal defense to state agencies and their employees. Cases in the division include damage claims, contract actions, class action lawsuits, employment issues, constitutional challenges and other types of civil litigation. The division also defends the state in lawsuits brought by inmates of Missouri's correctional facilities.

The president and the vice president of the United States are elected every four years by a majority of votes cast in the electoral college. These votes are cast by delegates from each state who vote in accordance, traditionally, with the majority of the state's voters. States have as many electoral college votes as they have congressional delegates. Missouri has 11 electoral college votes—one for each of the nine U.S. Congress districts and two for the state's two seats in the U.S. Senate.

The president is the chief executive of the United States, with powers to command the armed forces, control foreign policy, grant reprieves and pardons, make certain appointments, execute all laws passed by Congress and present the administration's budget. The president earns $400,000 annually, with an allowance for expenses.

The vice president is selected by members of each national political committee and runs on the same ticket for the same term as the president. The vice president assumes the presidency if the president dies or resigns the office, is incapacitated to the extent that he or she cannot exercise presidential duties for an extended period, or is impeached. The vice president presides over the functions of the U.S. Senate and acts as emissary of the president. The vice president earns $198,600 annually, plus an allowance for expenses.

Although not mentioned in the Constitution, the president's cabinet is the advisory arm of the office. It is made up of 15 cabinet members (or secretaries) who have the responsibility to operate each department. Secretaries are appointed by the president and serve at his pleasure. Cabinet secretaries earn $171,900 annually.

The House of Representatives is composed of 435 members; representatives are determined based on the population of each state. Missouri is allotted nine U.S. Representative seats.

Senators must be at least 30 years of age and be residents of the United States for at least nine years. They also must reside in the state they are elected to represent. Senators serve terms of six years, with one-third of the Senate membership elected every two years. Senators earn $154,700 annually, plus expenses.

Representatives must be at least 25 years of age and must have been residents of the United States for at least seven years. They also must reside in the state they represent. Representatives serve two-year terms and earn $154,700 annually, plus expenses.

Congress is in session for two years, beginning on January 3 of each year unless another date is specified. The presiding officer of the Senate is the vice president of the United States. The Senate also elects a president pro tem of the Senate to serve in the absence of the vice president. The president pro tem also represents the party in power and earns $171,900. The presiding officer of the House is called the speaker. The speaker traditionally represents the party in majority and earns $198,600.

George W. Bush

United States President

GEORGE W. BUSH (Republican) is the 43rd President of the United States. He was sworn into office January 20, 2001, after a campaign in which he outlined sweeping proposals to reform America's public schools, transform our national defense, provide tax relief, modernize Social Security and Medicare, and encourage faith-based and community organizations to work with government to help Americans in need. President Bush served for six years as the 46th Governor of the State of Texas, where he earned a reputation as a compassionate conservative who shaped public policy based on the principles of limited government, personal responsibility, strong families, and local control.

President Bush was born on July 6, 1946, in New Haven, Connecticut, and he grew up in Midland and Houston, Texas. He received a bachelor's degree from Yale University in 1968, then served as an F-102 fighter pilot in the Texas Air National Guard. President Bush received a Master of Business Administration from Harvard Business School in 1975. After graduating, he moved back to Midland and began a career in the energy business. After working on his father's successful 1988 presidential campaign, he assembled the group of partners that purchased the Texas Rangers baseball franchise in 1989.

He served as managing general partner of the Texas Rangers until he was elected Governor on November 8, 1994, with 53.5 percent of the vote. He became the first Governor in Texas history to be elected to consecutive four-year terms when he was re-elected on November 3, 1998, with 68.6 percent of the vote.

Since taking office, President Bush has signed into law bold initiatives to improve public schools by raising standards, requiring accountability, and strengthening local control. He has signed tax relief that provided rebate checks and lower tax rates for everyone who pays income taxes in America. He has increased pay and benefits for America's military and is working to save and strengthen Social Security and Medicare. He is also committed to ushering in a responsibility era in America, and has called on all Americans to be "citizens, not spectators; citizens, not subjects; responsible citizens building communities of service and a Nation of character."

The attacks of September 11th changed America—and in President Bush's words, "in our grief and anger we have found our mission and our moment." President Bush declared war against terror and has made victory in the war on terrorism and the advance of human freedom the priorities of his Administration. Already, the United States military and a great coalition of nations have liberated the people of Afghanistan from the brutal Taliban regime and denied Al Qaeda its safe haven of operations. Thousands of terrorists have been captured or killed and operations have been disrupted in many countries around the world. In the President's words, "our Nation—this generation—will lift a dark threat of violence from our people and our future. We will rally the world to this cause by our efforts, by our courage. We will not tire, we will not falter, and we will not fail."

President Bush is married to Laura Welch Bush, a former teacher and librarian, and they have twin daughters, Barbara and Jenna. The Bush family also includes their two dogs, Spot and Barney, and a cat, India.

Richard B. Cheney

United States Vice President

RICHARD B. CHENEY (Republican) has had a distinguished career as a businessman and public servant, serving four Presidents and as an elected official. Throughout his service, Mr. Cheney served with duty, honor, and unwavering leadership, gaining him the respect of the American people during trying military times.

Mr. Cheney was born in Lincoln, Nebraska, on January 30, 1941 and grew up in Casper, Wyoming. He earned his bachelor's and master's of arts degrees from the University of Wyoming. His career in public service began in 1969 when he joined the Nixon Administration, serving in a number of positions at the Cost of Living Council, at the Office of Economic Opportunity, and within the White House.

When Gerald Ford assumed the Presidency in August 1974, Mr. Cheney served on the transition team and later as Deputy Assistant to the President. In November 1975, he was named Assistant to the President and White House Chief of Staff, a position he held throughout the remainder of the Ford Administration.

After he returned to his home state of Wyoming in 1977, Mr. Cheney was elected to serve as the state's sole Congressman in the U.S. House of Representatives. He was re-elected five times and elected by his colleagues to serve as Chairman of the Republican Policy Committee from 1981 to 1987. He was elected Chairman of the House Republican Conference in 1987 and elected House Minority Whip in 1988. During his tenure in the House, Mr. Cheney earned a reputation as a man of knowledge, character, and accessibility.

Mr. Cheney also served a crucial role when America needed him most. As Secretary of Defense from March 1989 to January 1993, Mr. Cheney directed two of the largest military campaigns in recent history–Operation Just Cause in Panama and Operation Desert Storm in the Middle East. He was responsible for shaping the future of the U.S. military in an age of profound and rapid change as the Cold War ended. For his leadership in the Gulf War, Mr. Cheney was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom by President George Bush on July 3, 1991.

Mr. Cheney married his high school sweetheart, Lynne Ann Vincent, in 1964, and they have grown daughters, Elizabeth and Mary, and three granddaughters.

CHRISTOPHER S. (KIT) BOND (Republican) is a sixth generation Missourian, born in St. Louis in 1939. He grew up in Mexico, Missouri, where he still resides and tends to several groves of trees he planted by hand.

Bond graduated from Princeton University in 1960 and received his law degree from the University of Virginia, having graduated first in his class.

After serving as a clerk to the Chief Judge of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta, Bond practiced law in Washington, D.C. before returning home to Mexico, Missouri.

In 1969, Bond became an Assistant Attorney General under former Senator John Danforth. Before being elected State Auditor in 1970, Bond was chief counsel of Missouri's Consumer Protection Division.

At the age of 33, Kit Bond became the 47th Governor of the State of Missouri on January 8, 1973—the youngest Governor the state has ever had. Bond was re-elected to a second term as Governor in 1980. Among his greatest accomplishments as Governor was to take the Parents as Teachers program statewide.

After his second successful term as Governor, Bond continued his service to Missouri from his newly won seat in the United States Senate. In that 1986 election year, Bond was the only Republican to capture a seat previously held by a Democrat.

Based upon his solid ability to protect and advance Missouri's interests in the United States Senate, Bond was returned by Missouri voters to the U.S. Senate in 1992 and again in 1998.

In 1992, he was the only Republican candidate to win statewide in Missouri. And in 1998, Missouri voters re-elected him by an impressive nine-point margin in a year that witnessed the defeat of key incumbent Republican Senators elsewhere in the nation.

Bond believes that government and taxes should be no bigger than necessary. While serving in the U.S. Senate, Bond has built a reputation as a strong backer of literacy programs and efforts to make high quality health care more accessible for women and children.

He has done a good job making sure that Missouri receives its fair share of money to improve roads and highways. As chairman of the subcommittee that rewrites the federal highway bill, Bond will use his clout to continue this battle for Missouri. Bond has moved swiftly at the federal level to ensure Missouri remains at the front of the biotechnology revolution.

A strong supporter of law enforcement and a strong U.S. military, Bond also serves on the Senate Select Intelligence Committee. He is the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee that funds the nation's housing and veterans' needs.

JIM MATTHES TALENT (Republican) was elected to serve in the U.S. Senate in 2002 based on his record of experience and effectiveness on behalf of Missouri jobs, health care and the nation's national and homeland security. Previously he served eight years in the Missouri General Assembly and eight years in the U.S. Congress where he represented Missouri's 2nd Congressional District.

Talent is supporting Missouri interests on four important committees: the Senate Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry Committee; Armed Services Committee; Energy and Natural Resources Committee; and Aging Committee. Additionally, Talent serves as chair of the Armed Services Seapower Subcommittee and as chair of the Agriculture Committee's Subcommittee on Marketing, Inspection, and Product Promotion.

In his first year in the Senate, Talent was selected to serve as a Deputy Whip and was named a member of President Bush's Export Council. He is also a co-chair of the Senate Biofuels Caucus.

In the Missouri General Assembly, Talent succeeded in passing numerous pieces of legislation and piloted legislative efforts to build roads, toughen drug laws, secure taxpayer rights and reduce taxes. At the age of 32, Talent was unanimously chosen by his colleagues as the Minority Leader, the highest ranking Republican leadership position in the Missouri House.

In 1994, as a freshman congressman, Talent introduced the Real Welfare Reform Act, which subsequently became the basis for the historic bipartisan welfare reform bill, the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996. The legislation has resulted in millions of people moving from dependency on the government to jobs and self-sufficiency.

Talent is keeping the promises he made when he ran for the Senate by becoming Missouri's health care senator and helping pass a Medicare prescription drug benefit for seniors. He introduced the Small Business Health Fairness Act to provide health insurance for millions of uninsured Americans by allowing small business people to purchase health care plans for themselves, their employees and their families through their trade associations.

Talent also introduced health care legislation that earned bipartisan support to help treat and expand services for Americans with Sickle Cell Disease, an inherited blood disorder.

Talent has been a leader in the fight for important transportation and infrastructure projects in Missouri. He introduced a major transportation infrastructure initiative called Build America Bonds to empower state and local governments to complete significant infrastructure projects for all modes of transportation—roads, rail, transit, aviation and water. His proposal is designed to create millions of jobs, generate billions in economic activity and save thousands of lives by improving transportation safety.

Talent was born and raised in Des Peres, Mo. He graduated from Kirkwood High School in 1973 and attended Washington University in St. Louis, receiving the Arnold J. Lien Prize as the most outstanding undergraduate in political science. He graduated with honors from the Univ. of Chicago Law School in 1981 and clerked for Judge Richard Posner of the U.S. Court of Appeals, 1982–83.

Talent and his wife Brenda have been married since 1984. They have three children, Michael, Kate and Chrissy.

Historical Note: The election of early Missouri delegates was by general statewide ticket. In 1847, the state was divided into five congressional districts, from which representatives were elected. In 1863, the districts were expanded to number nine and ten years later in 1873, Missouri was redistricted to allow for thirteen congressional districts. By acts approved in 1882 and 1885, Missouri was allowed one additional district and in 1893, the congressional districts numbered fifteen. Missouri was allowed sixteen districts in 1901; these were in place until 1933. In that year, the state was allotted thirteen representatives, while the legislature redistricted the state. Those thirteen representatives were elected at large (indicated by an asterisk (*) in the listing). The state has been redistricted at various times over the last forty years, moving from eleven districts in the 1950s, to ten districts in the 1960s, to the current number of nine congressional districts in the 1980s. Because of the redistricting, it may be necessary to check the Revised Statutes of Missouri to determine which Missouri counties were represented by a district during a particular year. Redistricting changes generally occur in the years following the taking of the federal census.

The Missouri General Assembly

Legislative power in Missouri is vested by Section 1, Article III of the 1945 Constitution in the General Assembly, composed of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Senate consists of 34 members, elected for four-year terms. Senators from odd-numbered districts are elected in presidential election years. Senators from even-numbered districts are chosen in the "off year" elections. Each senator must be at least 30 years of age, a qualified voter of the state for three years and of the district he or she represents for one year. The lieutenant governor is president and presiding officer of the Senate. In the absence of the lieutenant governor, the president pro tem, elected by the Senate members, presides.

The House of Representatives consists of 163 members, elected at each general election for a two-year term. A representative must be at least 24 years of age, a qualified voter of the state for two years and of the district he or she represents for one year. The House of Representatives is presided over by the speaker, chosen by the members, and in the absence of the speaker by the speaker pro tem.

Reapportionment of both houses of the Missouri General Assembly following each decennial U.S. census is provided for by the Missouri Constitution.

Senators and representatives receive a salary of $31,351 per year, a weekly allowance for miles traveled going to and returning from their place of meeting and expenses for each day the General Assembly is in session.

Time of Meeting

The General Assembly convenes annually on the first Wednesday after the first Monday of January. Adjournment is midnight on May 30, with no consideration of bills after 6 p.m. on the first Friday after the second Monday in May. If the governor returns a bill with his objections on or after the fifth day before the last day upon which a session of the General Assembly may consider bills, the General Assembly is automatically reconvened on the first Wednesday following the second Monday in September for a period not to exceed 10 calendar days to consider vetoed bills.

A special session of the General Assembly may be called by petition of the General Assembly. If three-fourths of the members of the Senate and three-fourths of the members of the House of Representatives sign the petition calling for a special session, the president pro tem of the Senate and the speaker of the House shall, by joint proclamation, convene the General Assembly in special session.

The petition and proclamation must specifically state the subjects to be considered during the special session, and the signed petition must be filed with the secretary of state.

The General Assembly shall automatically stand adjourned sine die at 6 p.m. on the 30th calendar day after the convening of the special session unless it has adjourned sine die before the 30th day.

No appropriation bill shall be considered in the special session if, in that year, the General Assembly has not passed the operating budget in compliance with Article III, Section 25 of the Missouri Constitution.

The governor may convene the General Assembly in special session for a maximum of 60 calendar days at any time. Only subjects recommended by the governor in his call or a special message may be considered.

Organization of the General Assembly

Following the general election in November of even-numbered years, the majority and minority members of each house caucus, separately, nominate candidates for the offices to be elected by each body and organize their parties for the coming session. Nominees of the majority party are, in effect, elected. Each party names its floor leader, assistant floor leader, caucus chair and secretary.

Both houses of the General Assembly convene at noon on the opening day of the session. The Senate is called to order by the lieutenant governor. Temporary officers are named and the roll of new and carryover senators is read. Newly elected senators are then sworn in, usually by a judge of the Supreme Court. The president pro tem and other permanent officers are then elected and take an oath of office administered by the president of the Senate.

The House of Representatives is called to order by the secretary of state, and the oath is administered to all members. After the swearing-in ceremony, a roll call is taken and a temporary speaker is named. He or she presides for nomination and election of permanent officers. Temporary rules, usually the rules in force for the preceding session, are adopted.

After each house notifies the other that it is duly organized, a House Resolution is adopted inviting the Senate to a joint meeting to receive the governor's message. Under the Constitution, the governor, at the beginning of each session, delivers a message concerning state government with any recommendations he wishes to make for the enactment of legislation.

Each house determines its own rules, and procedures and rules may not be dispensed with except by unanimous consent or concurrence by a constitutional majority. Both the Senate and House of Representatives are required to keep a daily journal (or record) of their proceedings. At the end of the session, the journals are bound by the House and Senate. The secretary of state's office provides microform copies of the journals.

How Bills Become Laws

General Provisions

No law is passed except by bill. Bills may originate in either house and are designated as Senate Bills or House Bills, depending on the house in which they originate. No bill (except general appropriations bills) may contain more than one subject, which is to be expressed clearly in its title. No bill can be amended in its passage through either house so as to change its original purpose. No bill can be introduced in either house after the 60th legislative day of a session unless consented to by a majority of the elected members of each house. The governor may request consideration of proposed legislation by a special message. No appropriation bill shall be taken up for consideration after 6 p.m. on the first Friday following the first Monday in May of each year.

Introduction of a Bill

Legislation approved by the 1971 General Assembly (H.B. 156) provides for preintroduction of bills beginning December 1 preceding the opening of the assembly session and continuing up to, but not including, the first day of the session. Bills filed during the preintroduction period are automatically introduced and read the first time on the opening day of the session.

Bills may also be introduced by any senator or representative during the session. Bills may be written by the legislator or drafted by the staff of the Committee on Legislative Research at the request of a senator or representative. When introduced, a bill is assigned a number and read for the first time by its title by the Senate or House reading clerk. It then goes on the calendar for second reading and assignment to committee by the speaker of the House or the president pro tem of the Senate.

A public hearing before the committee to which a bill is assigned is the next step in the legislative process. Except in the case of some unusually controversial, complex or lengthy bills, the bill is presented by its sponsor, and both proponents and opponents are heard in a single hearing. When hearings are concluded, the committee meets to vote and makes its recommendations. The committee may (1) report the bill with the recommendation that it "do pass"; (2) recommend passage with committee amendments, which are attached to the bill; (3) return the bill without recommendation; (4) substitute in lieu of the original bill a new bill to be known as a committee substitute; (5) report the bill with a recommendation that it "do not pass"; or (6) make no report at all.

Perfection of a Bill

If a bill is reported favorably out of committee or a substitute is recommended, it is placed on the "perfection calendar"; and when its turn comes up for consideration; it is debated on the floor of the originating house. If a substitute is recommended by the committee or if committee amendments are attached to the bill, they are first presented, debated and voted upon. Further amendments can then be proposed by other members with their changes designated as House or Senate amendments to differentiate from the committee amendments; a House or Senate substitute bill can also be offered at this time. When all amendments and substitutes have been considered, a motion is made to declare the bill perfected. Perfection is usually voted on by a voice vote; but on the request of five members, a roll call shall be taken. If a majority of members vote to perfect, the bill is reprinted in its original or amended form.

Final Passage of a Bill

After perfection and reprinting, the bill goes on the calendar for third reading and final passage. When the bill is reached in the order of business, any member may speak for or against its passage but no further amendments of a substantive nature can be offered. At the conclusion of debate, a recorded vote is taken. Approval of a constitutional majority of the elected members (18 in the Senate and 82 in the House) is required for final passage.

Passage of the bill is then reported to the other house where it is read a second time, referred to committee for hearing, reported by committee, read a third time and offered for final approval. If further amendments or substitutes are approved, these are reported to the originating house with a request that the changes be approved. If the originating house does not approve, a conference may be requested; and members from each house are designated as a conference committee. Upon agreement by the conference committee (usually a compromise of differences), each reports to its own house on the committee's recommendation. The originating house acts first on the conference committee version of the bill. If it is approved it goes to the other house; and upon approval there, the bill is declared "truly agreed to and finally passed." If either house rejects the conference committee report, it may be returned to the same or a newly appointed committee for further conferences.

Upon final passage, a bill is ordered enrolled. It is typed in its finally approved form and printed, and the bills are closely compared and proofed for errors.

Signing of the Bill

Bills truly agreed to and finally passed in their typed form are then signed in open session by the House speaker and Senate president or president pro tem. At the time of signing, any member may file written objections which are sent with the bill to the governor.

Governor's Part in Lawmaking

The governor has 15 days to act on a bill if it is sent to him during the legislative session; and 45 days if the Legislature has adjourned or has recessed for a 30-day period.

If he signs a bill, it is returned to its house of origin with his message of approval then delivered to the Office of Secretary of State. If the Legislature is not in session, the bill is delivered directly to the Office of Secretary of State.

If the governor vetoes a bill, it is returned to the house of origin with his objections. A two-thirds vote by members of both houses is required to override a governor's veto.

If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within the time limits prescribed by Article III, Section 31 of the Missouri Constitution, it shall become law in the same manner as if the governor had signed it.

Effective Date of Laws

The 1945 Constitution provides that no law passed by the General Assembly shall take effect until 90 days after the end of the session in which it was enacted, except an appropriation act or in case of an emergency, which must be expressed in the preamble or in the body of the act. Some bills specify the exact date when they are to take effect.

Duties of the Secretary of State

The secretary of state preserves the finally typed and signed copy of the law. All the laws are bound together in one volume at the close of each session and are maintained in the State Archives should some question arise. The laws are published annually by the Committee on Legislative Research, in a volume titled Laws of Missouri, which is distributed to members of the General Assembly, state officials and other interested persons.

The general statute laws are revised by the revisor of statutes in the Office of the Committee on Legislative Research, digested and promulgated. These are known as the Revised Statutes of Missouri. Under legislation, the Committee on Legislative Research also publishes annual supplements to the statutes to include changes in laws since the last revision.

Joint Legislative Committees

Joint Committee on Administrative Rules

Room B-8, State Capitol
Telephone: (573) 751-2443

The Committee on Administrative Rules was created in 1975 and is a permanent joint committee of the General Assembly as provided in Chapter 536, Revised Statutes of Missouri. The Committee is comprised of five members of the Senate and five members of the House. In order to provide continuity in the operation of the committee, the statute authorizing the committee provides the appointment of each member shall continue during his or her term of office as a member of the General Assembly.

The Senate members are appointed by the president pro tem of the Senate, while the representatives are appointed by the House speaker. No more than three members from each chamber may be of the same political party.

Under state law, the Committee on Administrative Rules is to continuously monitor and review both proposed and existing rules promulgated by the various executive branch departments and divisions of state government. Citizens or interested organizations who have concerns about rules issued by state agencies can contact the Committee with their concerns. In its review the Committee is authorized to hold public hearings and review rules in question. The procedures allowing the committee to rescind or modify a proposed or existing state agency rule were changed in 1993. This action was taken in order to resolve constitutional concerns about the separation of powers between the Legislative Branch and the Executive Branch. Actions taken by the committee on rules and regulations of state agencies must be ratified by the full General Assembly through a concurrent resolution, which then must be signed by the governor. The goal of the Committee on Administrative Rules is to ensure state agencies do not exceed their statutory authority and that the agencies effectively accomplish their missions as mandated by the statutes.

The members of the committee are: Representative Richard Byrd, chair; Senator Chuck Gross, vice chair. Senators Gibbons, Jacob, Steelman and Wheeler. Representatives Goodman, Johnson, Luetkemeyer and Willoughby.

Oversight Division
132 State Capitol
Jefferson City 65101
Telephone: (573) 751-4143

The Committee on Legislative Research is a permanent standing committee as provided by Section 35 of Article III of the Missouri Constitution.

The committee is composed of 20 members of the General Assembly, with 10 members appointed by the leaders of each house. No major party may have more than six members appointed as members from either house.

Committee members are: Representative Catherine Hanaway, chair; Senator Gary Nodler, vice chair. Representatives Crowell; Townley; Bearden; Jetton; Yates; Davis (122); Walton; Barnitz and Abel. Senators Bartle; Bray; Caskey; Dougherty; Gibbons; Gross; Jacob; Russell and Shields.

The committee is directed by statute to provide a variety of services for the General Assembly and its members. The committee's offices and staff are divided into two divisions, a Research Division and an Oversight Division. The committee itself is not a policy making group and formulates no legislative program. Its staff renders only such technical and professional assistance as may be requested by the General Assembly or any of its members, or as required by statute.

DONALD PROST
Director
Legislative Research

MICHAEL WILSON
Director, Oversight Division
Committee on Legislative Research

The Research Division provides bill drafting assistance, prepares concurrent and courtesy resolutions, operates a legislative reference library and publishes the Revised Statutes of Missouri and subsequent supplements, and Session Laws of Missouri.

One of the legislative aids furnished by the committee is its bill drafting service.

Bills are drawn at the request of any member of the General Assembly but the fact that a bill has been drafted by a member of the staff does not carry with it the endorsement of the Committee on Legislative Research. All bill requests are treated confidentially by the bill drafter and without comment or criticism of the subject matter.

The committee does not act as a censorship committee and the fact that a staff member may have assisted in drafting a bill does not affect the standing or reception of a bill so far as the committee is concerned. Assembly members may or may not choose to have bills drafted by the service and there is no requirement that a bill be submitted to the bill drafting service before being introduced.

One need of state government is a modern legislative reference library. The library maintained by the Committee on Legislative Research continuously acquires books, pamphlets, periodicals and reports and the staff works closely with the staff of the Missouri State Library and the Supreme Court Library.

Through its acquisitions, exchanges and loans with other libraries, the legislative library provides much of the material requested by members of the General Assembly for the analysis of public questions and provides a research tool for bill drafting and research services.

Courtesy resolutions continue to be of great importance to members of the General Assembly. More than 400 per month are prepared by the resolution-writers for a variety of observances.

The Oversight Division is supervised by a subcommittee of the Committee on Legislative Research. Members of the Oversight Subcommittee are: Representatives Catherine Hanaway, chair; Senator Gary Nodler, vice chair. Representatives Bearden and Abel. Senators Russell and Caskey.

The Oversight Division is responsible for preparing fiscal notes on all bills pending before the General Assembly with the exception of appropriation bills. Fiscal notes must state the cost of the proposed legislation to the state for the next two fiscal years; whether the proposal would establish a program or agency which would duplicate an existing program or agency; whether the provisions of the proposal were federally mandated; whether the proposal would have significant direct fiscal impact upon any political subdivision of the state; whether any new physical facilities would be required; and whether an impact to small businesses would be expected. The division prepares approximately 3,000 fiscal notes during a regular legislative session.

The Oversight Division is authorized to perform management and program evaluations of state agencies and is assigned work pursuant to a duly adopted concurrent resolution of the General Assembly or a resolution adopted by the Committee on Legislative Research. The division conducts the evaluations in accordance with government auditing standards set forth by the U.S. General Accounting Office. The management and program evaluations of the division provides the General Assembly with important information regarding the status of programs they have created and the expenditure of funds they have authorized.

Chapter 5
Judicial Branch

Jackson County Courthouse, c1950.
(Missouri State Archives, Massie Collection)

Missouri's Judicial System

From its inception in 1820, Missouri state government has been constitutionally divided into three separate branches—the legislative, executive and judicial departments. The judicial department's function is not to make the laws of the state or to administer them, but to adjudicate the controversies that arise between persons and parties, to determine fairly and justly the guilt or innocence of persons charged with criminal offenses, and to interpret the laws of the state as enacted by the legislature and carried out by the executive.

The roots of Missouri's judicial branch reach back to the days when Missouri was a part of the Missouri Territory controlled by the French and Spanish. When Missouri was officially organized as a territory in 1812, the judicial power was vested in a superior court, inferior courts and justices of the peace. The Constitution of 1820, the state's first constitution, placed the judicial power in a Supreme Court, chancery courts (later abolished by the General Assembly), and circuit and other courts to be established by the legislature.

Today, Missouri has a three-tier court system. Article V of the Constitution, as amended by Missouri voters in 1976, vests the judicial power in a Supreme Court, the state's highest court, with statewide jurisdiction; in a court of appeals consisting of districts established by the General Assembly; and in a system of circuit courts that have original jurisdiction over all cases and matters, civil and criminal.

Effective January 2, 1979, the circuit court system absorbed all former courts of limited jurisdiction and became the state's single trial court. Cases once heard in magistrate and probate courts, in the St. Louis Court of Criminal Corrections, in the Hannibal and Cape Girardeau Courts of Common Pleas, and in municipal and other local courts now are heard in appropriate divisions of the circuit courts.

All the judges of these former courts have become either circuit, associate circuit or municipal judges. They may hear and determine different classes of cases within their respective circuits. A presiding judge, elected for a two-year term, has general administrative authority over all judicial personnel in the circuit. He or she may assign other judges throughout the circuit to relieve case load and administrative backlogs. The Supreme Court and court of appeals have general superintending control over all courts and tribunals within their jurisdictions. Original remedial writs may be issued and determined at each level of the court system. Decisions of the Supreme Court are controlling in all other courts.

Selection of Judges

In the first 30 years of Missouri's statehood, the judges of the supreme, circuit and chancery courts were appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. After much public discussion, the Constitution was amended in 1849 to provide for the popular election of judges, and this system remains in effect for most Missouri courts even today. In most circuits, the judges are elected by the voters in partisan elections.

However, in 1940 Missouri voters amended the Constitution by adopting the "Nonpartisan Selection of Judges Court Plan," which was placed on the ballot by initiative petition and which provides for the nonpartisan (non-political) appointment of certain judges, rather than having them popularly elected.

The Constitution, as amended further in 1976, provides that the Nonpartisan Court Plan is to be in effect for the Supreme Court, the court of appeals, and the circuit courts within the City of St. Louis and Jackson County. In addition, voters in St. Louis, Clay and Platte counties have elected to institute the plan, and the Kansas City Charter extends a nonpartisan selection plan to Kansas City municipal court judges. While all other judges are popularly elected, other judicial circuits may adopt the plan upon approval by a majority of the voters in the circuit.

Under the Missouri Court Plan, as it is often called, a vacancy on a court to which the plan applies is filled in the following way. A nonpartisan judicial commission of lay persons, lawyers and judges selects three persons from those who apply based on merit. The governor appoints one of the three. A judge appointed in this way must stand for retention in office at the first general election occurring after the judge has been in office for 12 months; the judge's name is placed on a separate judicial ballot, without political party designation, and the voters must vote either for or against retention in office. The judge's name is again placed on the ballot for retention vote at certain intervals. The Missouri Court Plan has served as a national model for the selection of judges and has been adopted by a number of other states.

Every supreme, appellate, circuit and associate circuit court judge must be licensed to practice law in Missouri. By constitutional amendment and statute, all judges must retire by age 70.

History and Organization

The Supreme Court has been the state's highest court since 1820, when the first Missouri Constitution was adopted. The earliest court, consisting of only three members, was required to hold sessions in four different judicial circuits in the state. At various times, the court sat in St. Louis, Jackson, Cape Girardeau, St. Charles, Boonville, Fayette, Hannibal, Lexington and other cities.

The size of the Supreme Court was increased to five judges in 1872 and to its present size—seven judges—in 1890. Because of the Court's increasing caseload, commissioners were appointed for a brief period in the 1880s. In 1911, the legislature authorized the court to appoint four commissioners, and in 1927, the number was changed to six. The commissioners were required to possess the same qualifications as judges of the Supreme Court. They received the same compensation and were appointed for four year terms. The commissioners in the past have heard cases along with the judges and their written opinions, if approved by the court, were promulgated as opinions of the Court.

Under terms of the 1970 constitutional amendment of Article V, the offices of the commissioners ceased to exist when the individuals holding the offices retired, resigned, died or were removed from office.

In 1890, the Supreme Court was divided into two divisions to permit it to handle and decide more cases in a shorter time. Under the present Constitution, the Court may sit en banc (all seven judges together) or in as many divisions as the court determines are needed. Today, all cases are assigned to and decided by the Court en banc.

Supreme Court Jurisdiction

Originally, the Supreme Court had only the traditional powers to decide cases on appeal from the lower courts (either the circuit courts or the court of appeals) and to issue and determine original remedial writs, such as habeas corpus, mandamus and prohibition. The Constitution of 1945 also authorized the court to establish rules for practice and procedure in the courts and to make temporary transfers of judicial personnel. Maintaining and updating the rules is a continuous process requiring substantial time. Each year, the Supreme Court, through the state courts administrator, transfers several hundred court personnel on a temporary basis to assist other courts. This usually is done when a judge has been disqualified by the parties in a case or when a judge's docket has become overly crowded and the judge cannot handle all the cases expeditiously.

The constitutional amendments of 1976 and 1982 defined the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court more narrowly than in the past, resulting in its receiving fewer cases on appeal and directing more appeals to the court of appeals. Under the amendment, the Supreme Court has exclusive appellate jurisdiction in all cases involving: the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States or of a statute or provision of the Missouri Constitution; the construction of the state's revenue laws; the title to any state office; and in all cases where the punishment imposed is death.

Cases do not have to fall within this area of exclusive jurisdiction to reach the Supreme Court, however. The Court may order cases transferred to it from the court of appeals if the cases involve questions of general interest or importance, if the court thinks the existing law should be reexamined, or for other reasons provided by rule of the court. The court of appeals also may order a case transferred to the Supreme Court either by order of the court of appeals itself or by the dissent of a court of appeals judge, if that judge certifies the court of appeals opinion is contrary to previous decisions of the Supreme Court or of other districts of the court of appeals.

In addition to its decision-making powers, the Supreme Court supervises all lower courts in the state. It is assisted in this task by the Office of State Courts Administrator, established in 1970. The Supreme Court also licenses all lawyers practicing in Missouri and disciplines those found guilty of violating the legal Rules of Professional Conduct.

Qualifications and Terms

Supreme Court judges must be at least 30 years of age, U.S. citizens for 15 years and qualified Missouri voters for nine years. Supreme Court judges are retained for 12-year terms.

Chief Justice

The seven judges of the Supreme Court select one of their number to be chief justice and preside over the court. The chief justice also handles many of the administrative details for the court. The present practice of the court is to rotate the position of chief justice every two years.

The court hears oral arguments each month from September through May. Court sessions are open to the public.

Supreme Court Building

The Supreme Court Building, a three-story, red brick structure of French Renaissance architecture, was built in 1907 and stands opposite the Capitol. It houses the attorney general's offices as well as those of the Supreme Court. The building's main features are a massive marble staircase in the lobby and the two-story high library. The building has been extensively refurbished and modernized with the use of moneys appropriated by the General Assembly.

Clerk's Office

The clerk of the Supreme Court is responsible for a wide range of duties, including the supervision of the internal administrative function of the Court itself as well as the planning and administrative direction of the Missouri Judicial Conference, the organization comprising all of the judges in the state.

Supreme Court Function

The day-to-day administrative duties, as they relate to the court, include handling all inquiries and procedural requests from attorneys throughout the state, arranging the docketing of cases, maintaining files in each case before the Court, receiving and disposing of fees related to those cases, and printing and distributing opinions of the Court. In all of these matters, the clerk reports directly to the chief justice.

Missouri Bar Responsibilities

The clerk of the Supreme Court has a number of additional duties relating to The Missouri Bar and the supervision of the admission of new attorneys.

Among the records required to be maintained by the clerk are the official and permanent roll of attorneys for the State of Missouri. The clerk's office also prepares on request certificates evidencing admission to The Missouri Bar. By Supreme Court rule, the clerk is treasurer of the state board of law examiners, which conducts bar examinations twice yearly. The clerk also supervises the semi-annual enrollment ceremonies and prepares all attorney licenses.

By Supreme Court rule, the clerk is ex officio treasurer of The Missouri Bar and the advisory committee and is responsible for collecting the annual attorney enrollment fee and distributing Missouri Bar membership cards to all attorneys licensed to practice in Missouri. He is responsible for maintaining the official records of The Missouri Bar and the bar fund and for preparing annual financial reports for publication in the Journal of The Missouri Bar. The clerk also is responsible for conducting annual elections for The Missouri Bar board of governors.

Security Administration

Additionally, the Supreme Court's security administrator is under the clerk's supervision. He is responsible for building security and the transportation of prisoners. The security administrator also acts as bailiff when the Court is in session.

Supreme Court Library

The Supreme Court Library, which is on the second floor of the Supreme Court Building, contains more than 110,000 volumes. These include the decisions of state and federal courts and federal administrative agencies, statutes of all states, 150 legal periodicals, legal textbooks, and many English decisions and statutes. In addition, the library contains computer research services for the use of court personnel.

The library's main responsibility is to meet the research needs of the Supreme Court, the attorney general's office, the General Assembly and the state's executive department agencies, but it also provides resources to members of the bench and bar and the general public. It maintains daily hours throughout the year.

Supreme Court Publications

Telephone: (573) 751-4696

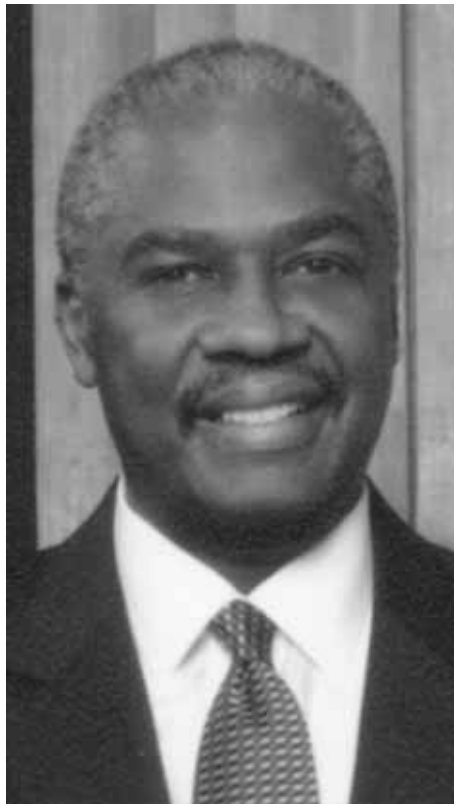

There are three monthly publications available to the public on a subscription basis. Tomorrow's Opinion Monitor (T.O.M.) allows electronic exploration of all cases in the appellate system with condensed legal arguments of pending cases, summaries of opinions and official citations. Infinite possibilities for searching include subject, statute, rule, keyword, attorney, and judge name. The Opinion Summary provides subscribers with a brief digest of decisions from the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals. The Pending Issues Digest provides a summary of the issues raised in legal briefs filed in the courts.

Office of State Courts Administrator

2112 Industrial Dr.
Telephone: (573) 751-3585 / FAX: (573) 751-5540

Acting under the direction of the Missouri Supreme Court, the Office of State Courts Administrator (OSCA) is responsible for providing administrative and technical support to the courts of Missouri as they vigorously pursue a judicial system that is accessible, equitable, and swift. The duties and responsibilities assigned to the state courts administrator are broad in scope and relate to all levels of the state court system.

Since the appointment of the first state courts administrator in 1970, the office has been responsible for providing technical assistance, management services, education and training programs, data processing and systems analysis, administrative procedure evaluation, compilation of statistics, and case processing support to the courts. The office also assists courts in developing and implementing court improvement projects in such areas as child abuse and neglect, juvenile services, family preservation, criminal history reporting, crime victims' rights, mediation services, alcohol and drug abuse treatment and prevention, and the implementation of time standards for case disposition. With the passage of SB 420 in 1994, the office has worked with the Missouri Court Automation Committee on a project with enormous potential for the people of Missouri. The Statewide Court Automation program will automate all the courts in the state and, through the use of advanced technologies, provide Missouri citizens with the most timely and responsive judicial system possible. The office is organized into five divisions and one office: Administration and Budget, Court Services, Information Technology, Juvenile and Adult Court Programs, Judicial Department Education, and the office for project management.

Director of Administration and Budget

Administration and Budget

Administration and Budget staff provide administrative services essential to office management and maintain programs developed to assist the judiciary in a variety of areas. The budget section compiles and organizes the judicial branch's annual state appropriation request. It prepares fiscal notes for proposed legislation that affects the judicial system, and provides support to the Supreme Court's Circuit and Appellate Court Budget committees.

The personnel section maintains the statewide Circuit Court Personnel System as well as the Circuit Court Personnel Handbook. This section also processes the payroll for all court employees and maintains the Payroll Handbook for the payroll designees in each county. It also has primary responsibility for recruitment and personnel management for OSCA.

The fiscal section processes and accounts for all funds appropriated to the Supreme Court for judicial branch operations paid by the state. The section also handles payments for reimbursement to court personnel for incurred expenses and provides fiscal training as needed.

The contract section is responsible for administering contracts for the judiciary; the section also monitors and authorizes bill payment for all Missouri drug courts.

The sponsored programs section develops internal and external partnerships with national, state and local funding sources. The section has managed grant funds for areas such as improving child abuse/neglect case management in juvenile courts, statewide juvenile court automation, automation of criminal history dispositions, electronic filing of adult protection orders, and improvement of mediation and other alternative dispute resolutions programs.

Finally, Administration and Budget staff also coordinate judge transfers and assignments, provide a legislative summary for court personnel, and perform office management functions for OSCA, and handles a wide array of requests for information from the legislature, governor's office, other public officials and the public in general.

Court Services

The Court Services Division acts as a service bureau for all court personnel statewide by providing direct assistance to trial courts in a number of areas including: developing procedures related to case processing and financial management; preparing transcripts from sound recorded tapes submitted by the courts; developing and updating procedural handbooks on case processing for court clerks; providing onsite case processing reviews, examining administrative and financial procedures to make recommendations for improved efficiency; and collecting criminal history dispositions data for the criminal records repository maintained by the Missouri Highway Patrol.

The advent of the Statewide Court Automation Program has created a major new responsibility within the division. Court Services staff worked closely with the software provider and court staff from around the state to "customize" the software and continually monitor changing practices and legal requirements over time so that the software is revised as necessary.

Court Services staff work with the courts prior to implementing automation by assisting the courts with preparation for computerized case management and financial accounting. OSCA staff provide on-site assistance several weeks after the court implements the automated system. After the court is automated, both financial specialists and court specialists provide help desk support and follow-up site visits.

In 2000, a statewide jury management automated system was purchased for implementation in the courts. Court Services coordinates the court training, assists the courts with forms design and procedural changes and provides telephone and on-site support to the courts. As of July 2003, the software has been installed in 112 counties and the jury staff in these counties have received training.

The Statistics Section is responsible for compiling caseload information from the trial courts. The information is used to project the impact of legislative changes, to improve docket management and administration of the courts, and to identify courts that need additional judicial resources and additional court clerk staff.

Information Technology

The Information Technology (OSCA-IT) division provides information technology management support for all Missouri courts and OSCA. The division is responsible for technical analysis, design, development, implementation, maintenance, quality assurance, and technical support for the systems that Missouri courts require as a business need. OSCA-IT provides this support exclusively to most courts, but also works in conjunction with the few metropolitan courts that have information technology staff on-location.

In 1994, Missouri Revised Statutes section 476.055 established a statewide court automation program and some offset funding with a $7 per-case court fee. The program oversight was given to the Missouri Court Automation Committee, under the Supreme Court. OSCA-IT has been actively involved with the Court Automation Committee in this enormous and exciting project, which was recognized internationally in 2003 with a Gold Medal of Achievement from the Computerworld Honors Program.

The Missouri Court Automation Program, is working to build an integrated justice system by using a family of standard automated systems that allow courts to increase their efficiency and provide increased service, fair and equitable justice and increased public access to public information. The standardization of the courts will provide a modern justice system with reduced costs to the litigant and taxpayer due to the economies of scale, greater accountability, timely justice, and improved public safety due to the ability of OSCA-IT to work with other state, federal and local systems to electronically exchange pertinent court information.

One of the most relevant examples of this electronic exchange has been the ability of courts using the statewide case management system to electronically transfer ex parte orders of protection to the law enforcement system, providing knowledge for officers and rapid protection for victims of domestic violence.

OSCA-IT also provides additional technical support for the office in the areas of judicial transfer, fiscal notes and inventory control. The staff develops special reports to assist in workload analysis, judicial research and special legislative requests.

Juvenile and Adult Court Programs

In 1997, the 89th General Assembly approved the creation of the Division of Juvenile and Adult Court Programs within OSCA. It is within this division that administrative efforts are launched to comply with statutory mandates that apply to juvenile and adult court services.

Early division efforts centered on providing continued education and training standards for juvenile court personnel, developing a standardized assessment and classification system that recommends graduated sanctions and services aimed at reducing juvenile offender recidivism, and evaluating the effects of tighter protective custody timelines in child abuse and neglect cases.

Division projects now include expanding communication networks, better assessment of juvenile offenders, and better evaluation of offender data through automated systems. Communication is being enhanced with better hardware, software, specialized juvenile offender databases, and establishment of cooperative information-sharing agreements with other youth service agencies. Conversion of the hand-scored standardized offender assessment and classification system to a software program allows for easier collection, storage, and evaluation of juvenile offender data. A single source for juvenile related information has been incorporated into the larger court automation system that is being implemented in various circuits throughout the state.

In addition, the division is also working to establish alternative treatment programs, and work on child abuse and neglect cases, foster care and adoption, divorce education programs for parent and children and alternative dispute resolution such as mediation in child custody and visitation disputes, child abuse and neglect cases, and in juvenile victim/offender situations to improve court services to the public. The success of adult drug courts as an alternative treatment to substance abuse problems has led to the development of juvenile and family drug courts. Under early development are other specialized courts such as mental health courts and a Unified Family Court. Federally funded pilot projects to establish permanency planning for abused and neglected children placed in foster care are in progress as well.

The division provides technical assistance in courthouse design related to security and Americans with Disabilities Act Access, assisting in disaster preparedness, certifying Spanish speaking interpreters for the courts, and locating and providing services for non-English speaking parties and those parties and customers covered by the Americans with Disabilities Act. The division also assists with programs that address issues of domestic violence.

The Juvenile and Adult Court Programs Division, in conjunction with the juvenile and family courts, is committed to building the foundation for a new standard of justice in Missouri. The impact of strong court programs and advanced technology will be far-reaching for the citizens of Missouri.

Judicial Department Education

The Division of Judicial Department Education is responsible for coordinating education services for almost four thousand state court personnel. These services are designed to ensure the courts have access to a highly skilled, professional workforce that is technologically literate, conversant with practices that aid in the internal management of the courts, oriented towards a high level of customer service, and forward thinking in improving that level of service in a rapidly changing environment.

The Coordinating Commission for Judicial Department Education provides strategic direction for a comprehensive statewide education program. Commission members are appointed by the Supreme Court and represent various levels of courts and regions of the state to ensure that the educational needs of all court personnel are fairly represented. The commission has built a comprehensive education program that affords opportunities to acquire and enhance technical knowledge and skills, and supervisory and leadership skills and abilities.

The commission relies on six education committees (Appellate Court Education Committee, Trial Judge Education Committee, Juvenile Division Education Committee, Municipal Division Education Committee, Court Clerk Education Committee, and the Court Reporter Education Committee) for program development. Each committee develops and implements a skills-based core curriculum within its assigned subject area designed to improve the knowledge base and skills of Judicial Department personnel.

The division is responsible for implementing the policies and programs established by the Coordinating Commission and its six education committees. The Education Division consists of three service delivery areas: Continuing Education, Automation Training, and Education Technology. The Continuing Education Section offers a broad range of education courses and certificate programs for court personnel. Education specialists, working in cooperation with committee members and court personnel design and coordinate the delivery of courses tailored to meet the unique needs of appellate, trial and municipal court personnel, including judges, clerks, juvenile officers, and court reporters. All courses are designed to provide court personnel with the knowledge and skills essential to discharging their judicial and administrative responsibilities.

The Automation Training Section, working in conjunction with the Missouri Court Automation program, designs, coordinates and delivers a comprehensive court automation training program. This program provides court personnel the skills necessary to effectively use the computer infrastructure and electronic case management systems that are the cornerstone of Missouri court automation.

The Education Technology Section is responsible for developing, implementing and evaluating alternative delivery methods of educational programming through the use of technology. Education Technology supports the work of the Automation Training Section and the Continuing Education Section through education services including web-based learning, computer-based learning, videoconferencing, and satellite broadcasts.

Missouri Court of Appeals

The first general intermediate courts in Missouri were provided for in the 1865 Constitution and were known as district courts. There were district courts in Jefferson City, Springfield, Cape Girardeau, Macon, St. Joseph and St. Charles. Each district was composed of three circuits. Appeals were taken from the circuit court to the district court, and then to the Supreme Court. However, the district courts were abolished in 1870 by a constitutional amendment.

Alarmed at the congested docket of the Supreme Court, the St. Louis Bar Association urged the 1875 Constitutional Convention to provide for another appellate court. Thus was created the St. Louis Court of Appeals consisting of three judges who heard appeals from St. Louis, St. Charles, Lincoln and Warren counties. Its territorial jurisdiction was expanded to include several more counties in 1884.

Another constitutional amendment in 1884 established the Kansas City Court of Appeals and authorized creation of another appellate court, when necessary, by the General Assembly.

The Springfield Court of Appeals was organized in 1909. Missouri's current appellate structure—a single Court of Appeals consisting of three districts—was established by a 1970 constitutional amendment.

The Eastern District of the Court of Appeals sits in St. Louis and consists of 14 judges. Eleven judges preside over the Western District in Kansas City, and seven judges sit on the Southern District bench meeting either in Springfield or Poplar Bluff. Trained law clerks, who are licensed attorneys, assist each appellate judge with legal research.

The Court of Appeals may issue and determine original remedial writs and has general appellate jurisdiction in all cases not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. However, as previously mentioned, cases not within the Supreme Court's exclusive jurisdiction may be transferred from the Court of Appeals to the Supreme Court when it is determined that a case involves an important issue that should be decided by the state's highest court.

A chief judge is elected for the Eastern and Southern districts of the Court of Appeals by the judges in the districts, and serves for such time as the districts determine. In the Western District, the chief judge serves a two-year term by rotation according to seniority.

The courts are authorized to sit in divisions if they choose, which all three districts have elected to do.

Courts of Appeals judges must be at least 30 years old, residents of their district, U.S. citizens for at least 15 years and Missouri voters for nine years before their selection. Appeals judges serve 12-year terms.

Missouri Circuit Courts

Missouri's first two circuit courts were established in 1815. The 1820 Constitution provided for the creation of four circuits, each containing from four to eight counties. The number of circuits has increased over the years; today 45 circuits operate in Missouri.

The first circuit judges were appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. However, the life term of the judges and their method of appointment proved unpopular; in 1849, the Constitution was amended to provide for popular election. Most circuit judges are elected today, although judges in some circuits are selected under provisions of the Nonpartisan Court Plan.

Constitutional amendments approved by Missouri voters in 1976 provide that the circuit courts shall be courts of original civil and criminal jurisdiction. All trials start at this level. Former courts of limited jurisdiction became divisions of the circuit court on January 2, 1979.

Within the divisions of the Circuit Court there are three levels of jurisdiction: circuit, associate and municipal. Circuit judges may act within all circuit jurisdictions.

The number of circuit judges is determined by the General Assembly. The Constitution requires at least one circuit judge in each of Missouri's 45 judicial circuits.

Associate circuit judges may hear matters pending in the Circuit Court or assigned by the Supreme Court. Associate circuit judges hear all cases pursuant to Chapter 517, RSMo, and have concurrent jurisdiction over all cases pending in the Circuit Court.

The Constitution requires at least one resident associate circuit judge in each county. The statutes authorize additional associate circuit judges depending on county populations. Presently, 186 associate circuit judges are required by statute.

Municipalities with 400,000 or more people must establish a municipal division over which a municipal judge presides. Communities of less than 400,000 may establish municipal divisions to hear ordinance violations, or the municipality may request that these matters be heard in the associate division of the Circuit Court. Municipal judges are paid locally.

By statute each circuit judge appoints a court reporter and the court in each circuit appoints a juvenile officer. A circuit clerk in each county is selected according to law and salaries are set by statute.

Circuit court judges must be at least 30 years old, residents of their circuit, U.S. citizens for 10 years and Missouri voters for three years. Circuit judges serve six-year terms. Associate judges must be at least 25 years old, Missouri voters and residents of the counties they serve. Associate judges serve four-year terms.

Circuit court judges each earn $108,000 annually; associate circuit court judges earn $96,000. Compensation is determined by statute (RSMo 476.405).

The Fine Collection Center

The Missouri Supreme Court established the Fine Collection Center (FCC) pursuant to Section 476.385, RSMo. The Fine Collection Center is a central bureau authorized by statute to process certain traffic, watercraft and conservation violations for the courts of counties that voluntarily join the Center's program. The Center began operation on July 1, 1999 and 63 Missouri counties were members of the program as of July 1, 2003. Offenders who receive citations in participating counties will have the option of paying their fine and costs directly to the FCC or pleading not guilty to the FCC and having their tickets sent to the county prosecutor for processing in the court system.

The Supreme Court appoints the Director of the Fine Collection Center. The Supreme Court also appoints a Fine Collection Center Committee of at least seven associate circuit judges. This committee provides oversight of the FCC program and establishes and maintains a uniform fine schedule to be used by the FCC. Counties that voluntarily join the program will agree to use the uniform fine schedule. The schedule contains all traffic, watercraft and conservation offenses that the FCC is authorized to process.

The FCC fine schedule sets uniform fines for the same offenses in all counties participating in the FCC, resulting in a more equitable system for offenders. Benefits of participating in the FCC include better accountability, improved collection rates, and a reduction in clerical workload associated with processing traffic tickets that allows court staff to redirect their efforts to other areas. The FCC also provides user friendly customer service at a toll free number that offenders can call from anywhere within the United States. The FCC accepts payment by check, money order or credit cards, making payment more convenient for offenders.

When an offender pays a ticket to the FCC, the Center is legally authorized to issue a record of conviction. Records of conviction for traffic offenses are prepared the next business day after the receipt of the offender's guilty plea and payment of the fine and court costs. The FCC sends these records of conviction to the Missouri Highway Patrol and to the Missouri Department of Revenue for entry on the offender's driving record. The center is developing a system that will electronically report traffic convictions directly to the Department of Revenue.

The FCC sends payments of fines and court costs to member county treasurers twice per month. The FCC keeps no part of the fine or costs. The county where the offense occurred receives all the fine money and all the county's share of court costs on each case. The FCC sends courts costs and fees designated for state agencies directly to those agencies.

Commission on Retirement, Removal and Discipline of Judges

2190 S. Mason Rd., Ste. 201
St. Louis 63131
Telephone: (314) 966-1007 / FAX: (314) 966-0076

The Commission on Retirement, Removal and Discipline of Judges was created by a constitutional amendment in 1970. It began operating on January 1, 1972, and is governed by Supreme Court Rule 12.

The commission is responsible for receiving and investigating all requests and suggestions for the retirement of judges because of disability and all complaints concerning the alleged misconduct of judges and members of judicial commissions. It is composed of six members who serve six-year terms. Two non-lawyers are appointed by the governor, two lawyers are appointed by the Missouri Bar's governing body, one Court of Appeals judge is selected by Court of Appeals judges and one circuit judge is selected by the state's circuit judges.

The members as of July 1, 2003, were: Thomas J. Plunkert, attorney, St. Louis, chair; Vivian L. Eveloff, St. Louis, secretary; Richard P. Bruening, attorney, Kansas City; Robert M. Clayton II, circuit judge, Hannibal; Gary M. Gaertner, appellate judge, Eastern District, Court of Appeals; Jan M. Marcason, Kansas City.

Upon receiving a proper complaint against a judge or other judicial officer, the commission conducts an informal investigation. If at least four members of the commission find there is probable cause to believe the person may be guilty of misconduct, incompetency or other action constituting grounds for discipline as listed in Rule 12.08, a formal investigation is conducted. If at least four members find the person investigated should be disciplined, a report containing findings of fact and conclusions of law is made to the Supreme Court, with recommendations for discipline (removal from office, suspension or other discipline). The court then makes a final ruling based on the commission's record and transcript.

A similar procedure is followed in cases involving retirements because of disability.

In order to protect the public from persons unqualified or unauthorized to practice law, the Missouri Supreme Court has established an attorney disciplinary system. A chief disciplinary counsel is appointed by the Supreme Court to investigate allegations of professional misconduct, incompetence and incapacity of lawyers. Regional Disciplinary Committees throughout the state, composed of at least four lawyers and two lay persons, may investigate complaints referred to them by the Chief Disciplinary Counsel or the Advisory Committee. The Chief Disciplinary Counsel and the Regional Disciplinary Committees are empowered to institute formal proceedings against lawyers accused of misconduct. If the Chief Disciplinary Counsel or a majority of a Regional Disciplinary Committee finds that there is probable cause to believe that a lawyer is guilty of professional misconduct, they prepare information making specific allegations of violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct. The lawyer may request a hearing to be held before a Disciplinary Hearing Panel selected by the Advisory Committee from a panel of disciplinary hearing officers appointed by the Supreme Court. The panel is made up of two lawyers and one lay person. If the Disciplinary Hearing Panel finds, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the lawyer is guilty of misconduct, it makes findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendations for discipline, which are then filed in the Supreme Court. It is the responsibility of the Supreme Court to impose any discipline found to be warranted. The Chief Disciplinary Counsel is also charged with the duty of investigating the unauthorized practice of law and instituting suits and other actions to stop such practices. The Chief Disciplinary Counsel conducts investigations of applications made by lawyers seeking reinstatement after they have been suspended or disbarred. The Chief Disciplinary Counsel is Maridee Farnquist Edwards.

The Advisory Committee may give formal opinions and the Legal Ethics Counsel may give nonbinding informal advisory opinions, interpreting Supreme Court Rules 4, 5 and 6, to members of the Bar. The Advisory Committee also oversees the hearing process and reviews complaint files that have been closed after investigation, at the request of the complainant. The Legal Ethics Counsel serves as counsel and staff for the Advisory Committee. Members of the Advisory Committee, appointed by the Supreme Court, are: John C. Dods, chair, Kansas City; Janet Blauvelt, Kansas City; Al Brooks, Kansas City; Christina R. Neff, Jefferson City; John Padgett, St. Louis; Luther J. Rollins Jr., St. Louis; James E. Spain, Poplar Bluff, and Sherry A. Rozell, Springfield. The Legal Ethics Counsel is Sara Rittman. The Chief Disciplinary Counsel is Maridee Farnquist Edwards.

Standards for admission to the bar, set out in Supreme Court Rule 8, are administered by the State Board of Law Examiners. Its six lawyer members are appointed by the Supreme Court for one six-year term. It conducts bar examinations for new lawyers each year on subject matters of the law of general application. The two-day exam is given in February and July in Jefferson City. One day of the examination consists of essay questions and the second day is devoted to the multistate bar examination, a multiple choice test that is administered in 48 other states.

Admission information and application forms are available from the Supreme Court clerk's office or on the web at www.mble.org.

The Missouri Bar is the official organization of all Missouri lawyers and judges. Established by rule of the Supreme Court of Missouri in 1944, it is the successor of the original Missouri Bar Association, a voluntary organization of lawyers founded in 1880.

Membership in The Missouri Bar is required of every lawyer who practices in Missouri and of every judge of a state court. To qualify for membership, a person must have completed at least six years of study in college and an approved law school leading to a bachelor of law or a Juris Doctor degree. Those seeking membership in The Missouri Bar must also pass a comprehensive bar examination and character fitness investigation and make application for admission to the bar with the Supreme Court of Missouri.

Committees

There are numerous standing committees of The Missouri Bar plus a number of special project committees. Committees of The Missouri Bar meet at least twice each year to discuss particular areas of the law and, in some cases, draft potential legislation in those areas. Committee members, as well as officers and other members of The Missouri Bar, are available to testify before the General Assembly in support of these bills. In addition, the bar's board of governors often votes to support or oppose other bills pending before the legislature and the bar's legislative services are directed accordingly. Because of this status as a mandatory organization for those practicing law in Missouri, the bar's legislative efforts are confined to bills affecting the administration of justice.

Education

The Missouri Bar's Department of Continuing Legal Education (CLE) has taken the lead in keeping bar members informed of the latest developments in law. Each year, the CLE Department organizes and presents a number of programs across the state designed to keep lawyers abreast of changes in state and federal law. These sessions are regularly accompanied by detailed course materials designed to supplement the programs themselves. In addition, the department's renowned "black book" series provides attorneys with valuable reference materials they can make use of in their own law libraries.

Publications

The Journal of The Missouri Bar, offering valuable perspectives on the law from its lawyer-authors, is published six times per year as the official publication of the legal profession in Missouri. Also available to members are the Legislative Digest, published twice during sessions of the General Assembly; The Missouri Bar Bulletin, a newsletter for bar members; the Courts Bulletin, a monthly update on recent court decisions in pertinent areas of the law; and The Citizenship Educator, a publication designed to promote the growth of law-related education in Missouri.

Since 1956, The Missouri Bar has carried on a broad program of public information and education. Thousands of informative pamphlets and other educational materials on the law are distributed annually, including materials from an extensive law-related audio-visual lending library. Copies of the bar's brochures are also available on the Internet at www.mobar.org. The growth of the bar's public information program has been aided by cooperative ventures with the Extension Division of the University of Missouri, the State Department of Elementary and Secondary Education, the Missouri Press Association, the Missouri Broadcasters Association, various state colleges and other groups and associations.

Through the years, The Missouri Bar has gained much recognition on the national and international level. It has been cited many times by the American Bar Association as the outstanding bar association in the nation. Its programs have won Freedom Foundation awards, the American Bar Award of Merit and the American Judicature Society's Justice Award. Staff members and officers serve on many important national committees and work with various national groups on problems of national scope.

Judicial Conference of Missouri

Supreme Court Bldg.
PO Box 150
Telephone: (573) 751-4144

In 1943, the General Assembly established the Judicial Conference of Missouri, which is composed of all state judges. The conference is charged by statute (Section 476.350) with studying the organization and administration of the state's judicial system, compiling data on the work of various courts and making biennial reports to the General Assembly, including any recommendations the conference may have for improving the laws. Since 1974, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, who is the conference's presiding officer, has presented an annual State of the Judiciary address to a joint session of the General Assembly, reviewing the problems, needs and goals of the judicial department.

The statute also requires the conference to hold an annual meeting to be attended by all judges. At this meeting, the judges discuss the problems of court administration and invite experts in various fields to speak on matters of particular concern.

The clerk of the Supreme Court provides administrative and staff assistance and also serves as secretary to the executive council and the conference.

Nonpartisan Judicial Nominating Commissions

Under provisions of the Missouri Constitution, Article V, any vacancy occurring in the office of judge of the Supreme Court, the court of appeals or the circuit courts within St. Louis City or Jackson County is filled by the governor, who appoints one of three qualified persons nominated by a nonpartisan judicial commission. This method of selecting circuit judges was adopted by the voters of the 21st Judicial Circuit, St. Louis County, at the general election in 1970, and by the voters of the Sixth Judicial Circuit, Platte County and the Seventh Judicial Circuit, Clay County, in 1972. This method of selecting judges was extended to associate circuit judges in these jurisdictions in 1979.

Appellate Judicial Commission

Nominations for judges of the Supreme Court and the court of appeals are made by a seven-member Appellate Judicial Commission. It consists of a judge of the Supreme Court selected by the members of the Court and two resident citizens from each of the three court of appeals districts. One lawyer is elected from each district by members of The Missouri Bar residing in that district, and one non-lawyer is appointed from each district by the governor.

State law (Chapter 600, RSMo) provides for a seven-member Public Defender Commission to oversee the state public defender system. This system provides constitutionally and statutorily required legal defense services to all jurisdictions within the state by means of a centrally administered Office of the State Public Defender. The members of the commission are appointed by the governor with consent of the Senate and serve without compensation for six-year terms. Four members must be lawyers, and no more than four members may be of the same political party.

The commission appoints the state public defender director to head the Office of the State Public Defender, which is an independent department of the judicial branch. The office is responsible for establishing local district public defender offices throughout the state. In 1989, the State Public Defender System was reorganized to ensure that defender services were provided to each area of the state through district trial offices. In counties where public defender offices are located, the county is required to provide office space and utilities. All other expenses, including salaries, are paid by the state.

When a person accused of a crime asks for assistance of counsel, the court requests that the public defender determine the person's eligibility for representation. The public defender considers all the circumstances of the case including the defendant's income and ability to make bond and the commission guidelines for determination of indigency in making a decision.

Public defenders represent indigent defendants on the underlying juvenile, misdemeanor or felony charges, the appeal of the conviction and the parole or probation revocation proceeding. The attorney also files a lien against the defendant for reimbursement of legal services.

The Missouri Supreme Court Building, located across the street from the Capitol, was built with $400,000 in funds appropriated following the 1904 World's Fair in St. Louis. Construction began in 1905 and was completed two years later.

The three story, red brick building is of French Renaissance architecture with white stone pillars at each wing of the front facade, white stone trim, and a sloping slate roof. The main feature of the building's large lobby is a massive marble staircase.

There are two courtrooms on the second floor of the building, and both have extensive mahogany furnishings purchased when the structure was built.

Office space is provided for the seven judges. Originally, the offices also served as apartments for the judges, who lived in their hometowns and came to Jefferson City part of the year to hear cases. Now, most of the rooms have been converted into small offices for law clerks.

On the first floor, office space is provided for the Attorney General and the clerk of the Supreme Court. A two-story library runs the entire length of the building and contains more than 110,000 volumes.

When the Capitol burned in 1911, the governor's office was moved temporarily to the building, and one of the courtrooms served as the Senate chamber.

Executive Departments

Government exists to serve, and a broad network of government organizations has been created to accomplish the purpose. Because of the many different names used by these groups—departments, divisions, agencies, boards, commissions, bureaus, units, sections, programs and others—it can be difficult to determine which area of government is responsible for certain services, or to sort out responsibilities or relationships within the governmental framework.

The Missouri Constitution (Article II, Section 1) states: "The powers of government shall be divided into three distinct departments—the legislative, executive and judicial." This section also prohibits persons within each branch from exercising powers of the other branches.

From these three branches spring the variety of organizations which deliver services of state government. Generally speaking, the legislative and judicial branches rely on committees or other small, appointed groups to perform research, develop policy, provide advocacy services or handle administrative duties. In these two branches, most services are delivered through the offices of the elected officials themselves and not by related agencies.

It is through the executive branch that the greatest proportion of state services are delivered. The Constitution (Article IV, Section 12) and the Reorganization Act of 1974 have established a number of "executive departments" to deal with specific areas of interest. A chart showing the present state departments is shown on the following page.

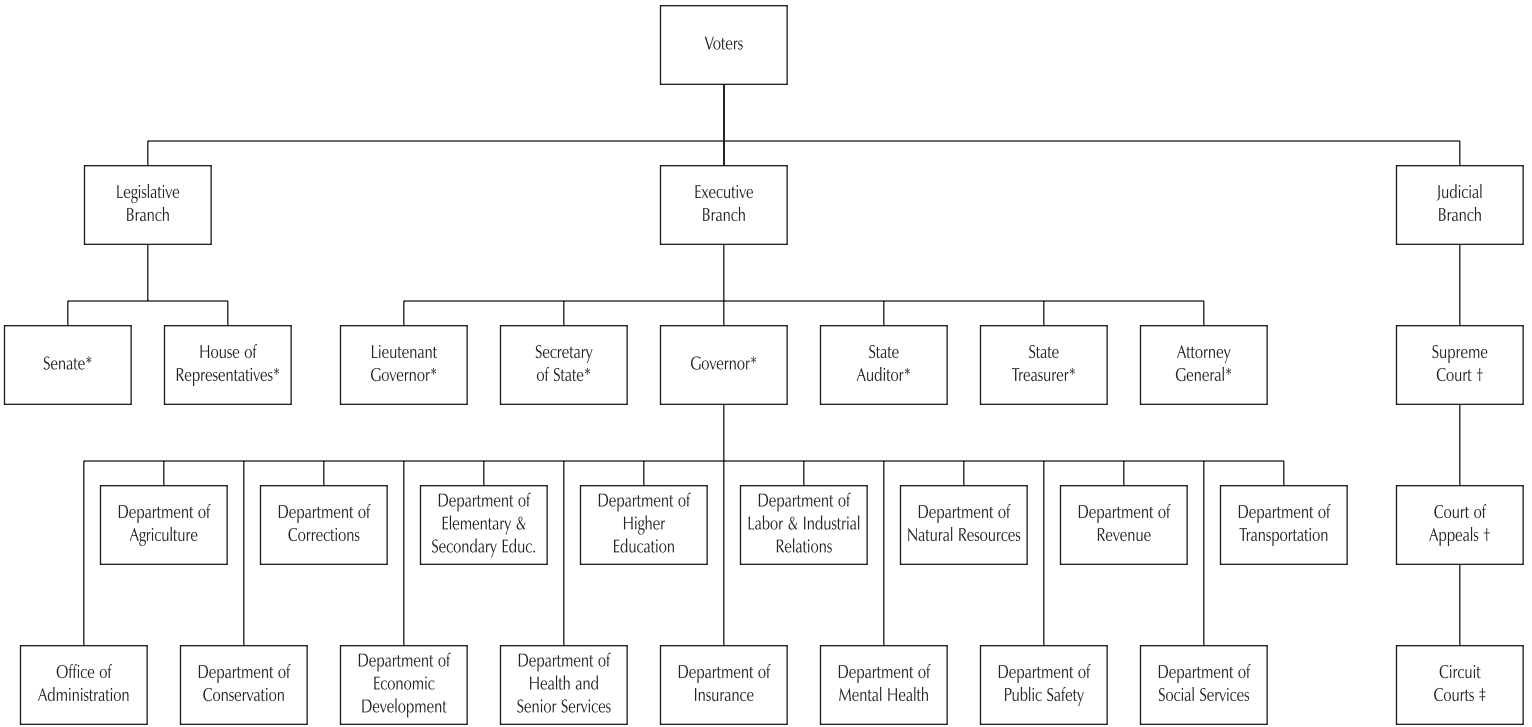

The Missouri Constitution, provides for 16 specific departments: the Office of Administration and the departments of Agriculture, Conservation, Corrections, Economic Development, Elementary and Secondary Education, Health and Senior Services, Higher Education, Insurance, Labor and Industrial Relations, Mental Health, Natural Resources, Public Safety, Revenue, Social Services and Transportation.

Within each executive department exists a variety of offices of varying size and scope which deal with specific services. Traditionally, "divisions" are the next-largest organizations within departments and function to bring together smaller-sized groups, such as "bureaus," "sections" or "units." Divisions may be governed by a "board" or "commission" composed of members who are either appointed by the governor, made members by law or appointed by a department official. State agencies may administer certain sections of state law, as defined by the Revised Statutes of Missouri, may develop their own rules and regulations as promulgated in the Missouri Register and Code of State Regulations or may institute programs and policies which address the needs of their areas of service.

The Missouri Constitution

Since achieving statehood in 1821, Missouri has had only four Constitutions. The first was adopted in 1820 and was presented to Congress before Missouri was allowed to enter the union of states. The state's second Constitution was drafted and adopted in 1865. It was replaced by a third Constitution only ten years later. The current Constitution was adopted in 1945 and has been amended a number of times in order to meet the changing needs of our state and its people.

The Constitution of the State of Missouri is published by the Office of Secretary of State pursuant to the Revised Statutes of Missouri (RSMo 2.110). Copies of the Missouri Constitution, which also includes the text of the U.S. Constitution, are available without charge by writing to: Secretary of State Matt Blunt, Publications Division, PO Box 1767, Jefferson City, MO 65102.

More than 36,000 state employees in six state departments (Office of Administration, Corrections, Health and Senior Services, Mental Health, Natural Resources, and Social Services) and sections of three other departments (Economic Development, Labor and Industrial Relations and Public Safety) comprise the Missouri Merit System.

The UCP is designed to promote equity in pay among state employees in most executive branch agencies and to provide coordinated compensation policies. The state's Chief Information Officer directs the Office of Information Technology, established in 1995. Assisting the Chief Information Officer and his staff is the Information Technology Advisory Board (ITAB). Comprised of department deputy directors and division directors, the committee provides guidance to OIT on issues related to the effective application of information technology to improve state service operations.

JAMES MILUSKI
Director, Division of Purchasing and Materials Management

GERRY WETHINGTON
Chief Information Officer

The statewide Information Systems Strategic Plan drives the mission and goals identified in four key areas: access, optimization, architecture and innovation. The availability of resources and the effective delivery of services are critical to the mission of the state. In order to maximize accessibility, the Plan's goal is to create an operational environment that provides access to appropriate information enabling the delivery of services to Missouri citizens.

A criterion for optimization is the effective and efficient utilization of state resources necessary to create and support an operational environment where costs are managed, resources are shared and used to their maximum potential and services are continually improved. Establishment of an enterprise-wide adaptive architecture is important to serve as a planning vehicle and communications medium for technology infrastructure, principles and practices. Innovation through the effective application of information technology is vital to the state and our goal is to encourage recognition of the value of information technology and the benefits it provides to the citizens of Missouri.

The Administrative Hearing Commission is a neutral, independent administrative tribunal that decides disputes involving state agencies and another party, usually a private person or corporation. The Commission typically decides the cases after a trial-type hearing. It hears evidence and arguments from the state agency and from the other party. Any party, including the state agency, may seek review of the Administrative Hearing Commission's decision from the judicial branch.

The statutes authorize jurisdiction for the Administrative Hearing Commission to resolve disputes over decisions of more than 100 state agencies. Chief among them are the Director of Revenue's tax decisions, professional licensing decisions of many boards of the Department of Economic Development and other departments, the Department of Social Services' decisions on payments to Medicaid service providers and the Missouri Health Facilities Committee's decisions on certificates of need. The statutes commit other specific matters to the Administrative Hearing Commission also. The Administrative Hearing Commission resolves about 2,000 cases per year.

The Commission consists of not more than three members, appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate, who serve six-year terms.

Mission Statement:

"To serve, promote, and protect the agricultural producers, processors and consumers of Missouri's food, fuel and fiber products."

Like Missouri agriculture, the duties of the Missouri Department of Agriculture are diverse. Created by the General Assembly in 1933, the department enforces those state laws that regulate and market Missouri's agricultural industry. The agency administers programs that protect the state's producers, processors, distributors and consumers of food, fuel and fiber, while marketing Missouri agricultural products at home and abroad.

Office of Director

The Department of Agriculture is managed by a director who is appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. The director determines department policy, oversees the department's six divisions and serves as a liaison to the governor, the state legislature, the agriculture community and the public.

The director's office serves a variety of constituencies and provides a representative voice on a broad range of public issues affecting Missouri farmers, ranchers, agribusinesses and agriculture policy makers. The director is responsible for enforcing state agricultural statutes and monitoring the success of the department's regulatory and promotional programs.

Housed in the director's office are the department's administrative and support functions: fiscal, human resources, public affairs, information technology, budget, grants management and policy and planning.

The director is a standing member of the State Milk Board, the State Fair Commission, the Missouri Soil and Water Districts Commission, the Missouri Development Finance Board, the Missouri Petroleum Storage Tank Insurance Fund, and the Missouri Agricultural and Small Business Development Authority.

DEANNE HACKMAN
Director, Agriculture Business Development Division

Agriculture Business Development Division

The Agriculture Business Development Division helps create opportunities for success for Missouri's farmers and agribusinesses. Division staff help facilitate growth in Missouri's agriculture-based businesses by providing business counseling, information and training on a sector-by-sector basis through its Agriculture Innovation Center and other business and industry support programs.

Areas of specialization include capitalization, business planning, marketing, industry development, product and brand development, organizational structures and legal issues. Staff also help facilitate growth in Missouri's agriculture-based industries by working with key players such as universities, associations, private sector partners and federal and state agencies to aid in the growth of each sector.

The division also plays a key role in growing the demand for products raised and processed in Missouri by increasing consumer awareness and sales. The AgriMissouri marketing program serves as the overall brand for all domestic promotions, including retail, restaurant, foodservice, farmers' markets and agritourism promotions.

Additionally, the Grape and Wine Program promotes grapes, juice and wine produced in Missouri, and also oversees research, development and advisory activities. The program is funded by a tax on all wine sold in Missouri.

The division's International Marketing Program works worldwide to sell Missouri agricultural products. The program has international offices in Taiwan and Mexico and works with the Department of Economic Development's offices worldwide. The division is also home to the Missouri Agricultural and Small Business Development Authority (MASBDA).

AgriMissouri

The AgriMissouri program is a branded program designed to grow the demand for agricultural products raised and processed in Missouri. The program represents more than 550 farmers, companies and farmers' markets statewide and plays a key role in increasing consumer recognition of Missouri's agricultural products through retail, restaurant and foodservice channels.

Agriculture Innovation Center

The Agriculture Innovation Center (AIC) provides information, resources and assistance for Missouri's agricultural producers. The center's primary objective is to enhance farm profitability in Missouri through innovations in technology, marketing and economic organization. In addition to providing one-on-one assistance to producers interested in producing, marketing or processing their commodities in new ways, the AIC works with a wide variety of professionals involved in value-added agriculture.

International Marketing Program

The international marketing program is a valuable link between Missouri producers, agribusinesses, forest products industry and foreign agricultural buyers. Specialists work to facilitate contacts between buyers and sellers and assist Missouri suppliers in responding to international marketing opportunities.

The program provides potential exporters with services to:

- analyze specific market opportunities;
- establish contacts with foreign buyers;
- provide data on tariffs, health regulations, labeling requirements, export documentation, transportation, international financing and payment terms, insurance, etc.;
- plan, arrange and participate in outgoing sales and incoming buying missions;
- assist and participate in domestic and international trade shows and other exhibitions.

The international marketing program works with the USDA's Foreign Agricultural Service to provide export sales leads, international advertising and export assistance from agricultural attaches.

The program manages agricultural trade offices in Taipei, Taiwan and Guadalajara, Mexico. The program is also supported by state offices and representatives in San Paulo, Brazil; London, England; Accra, Ghana; Tokyo, Japan; Seoul, South Korea; Singapore and Bangkok, Thailand; Dusseldorf, Germany; and Johannesburg, South Africa.

Grape and Wine Program

The grape and wine program is responsible for researching, developing and promoting Missouri grapes, juices and wine. The program is funded by a tax on all wine sold in Missouri.

These funds support the program's three sections: enology and viticulture advisory services, research, promotion and marketing.

Program expenditures provide:

- professional advice to Missouri grape growers and wine makers;
- applied research for developing grape varieties and cold hardiness studies;
- consumer education to increase awareness of Missouri grapes and wines;
- information about the Missouri grape and wine industry.

The program also administers the Missouri wine and juice competition and awards ceremony and hosts the Midwest Regional Grape and Wine Conference.

The Missouri grape and wine program works closely with and supports the State Fruit Experiment Station in Mountain Grove. The program also receives counsel from the Missouri Wine and Grape Advisory Board.

Missouri Agricultural and Small Business Development Authority

Through its Beginning Farmer Loan Program, the Missouri Agricultural and Small Business Development Authority issues tax-free bonds to lenders who make low-interest loans to farmers and small businesses. Up to $250,000 may be loaned to first-time farmers to purchase land or make improvements.

Through the Animal Waste Treatment System Loan program, the authority makes loans for animal waste treatment systems for up to 10 years at terms below conventional interest rates. Loans can be used to buy land for lagoons, build animal waste facilities or purchase waste-handling equipment—all of which work to prevent potential surface and ground water contamination.

The authority also administers the Single-Purpose Animal Facilities Loan Guarantee program, which provides banks with a 25 percent first-loss guarantee on loans up to $250,000 for as long as 10 years. Independent livestock producers may use the loans to finance breeding or feeder livestock, land, buildings, facilities, equipment, machinery and animal waste systems for producing poultry, swine, beef or dairy cattle.

The Missouri Value-Added Grant program provides grants of up to $200,000 to projects that add value to agricultural products and aid the economy of a rural community. Grants are for activities prior to start-up or expansion, such as feasibility studies, marketing studies or business plans.

The Missouri Value-Added Loan Guarantee program provides lenders with a 25 percent first loss guarantee on loans up to $250,000 for projects that add value to agricultural products. Loans that finance land, improvements and equipment associated with a value-added enterprise may be guaranteed, as well as loans for the purchase of stock in a start-up cooperative that processes an agricultural product. Loans for plant stock for grapes that will be processed into wine are also eligible for loan guarantee.

The New Generation Cooperative Incentive Tax Credit program provides tax credits to induce farmer-investment in new generation cooperatives that process Missouri agricultural products into value-added goods, provide substantial benefits to Missouri's agricultural producers and create jobs for Missourians.

The Agricultural Products Utilization Contributor Tax Credit program allows the authority to grant tax credits in an amount of up to 100 percent of a contribution made by an individual, partnership, corporation, trust, limited liability company or other donor. The contribution must be made to the authority to be used for financial or technical assistance for rural agricultural business concepts.

The authority is administered by a seven-member commission, which is appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. The director of agriculture serves as an ex-officio member.

Agriculture Development Fund

The agriculture development fund provides loans and grants to rural Missouri residents.

The following guarantees, loans and grants are available from the Missouri Department of Agriculture:

Crop and Livestock Loan Guarantee Program, which provides financial benefits to Missouri youth who undertake crop or livestock production projects.

Building Our American Communities (BOAC) Grant Program, which gives $36,000 annually to Missouri 4-H clubs and FFA chapters for aid in developing and advancing Missouri's rural communities.

Agriculture Scholarship Program, which is offered through a competitive application process to high school seniors who plan to attend Missouri universities and colleges.

Fifteen individuals are selected to receive agriculture scholarships that entitle them to receive $500 to attend a Missouri university or college. Eight individuals are selected to receive $250 to attend a junior or community college.

Missouri Agribusiness Academy, which gives 30 selected high school sophomores a chance to explore the state's vast agribusiness resources by viewing various facets of agriculture; visiting agribusinesses; and meeting leaders in agriculture, government and education.

Academy students are selected through a competitive written application and oral interview process.

Missouri Alternative Loan Program, which is available for use by Missouri farmers and youth to finance the production, processing and marketing needs of an alternative enterprise.

Animal Health Division

The Division of Animal Health, under the direction of the state veterinarian, promotes and protects Missouri's diverse and dynamic livestock industry. The assistance and oversight provided by the division's programs ensure greater market access for Missouri's livestock and companion animal industries.

Animal agriculture accounts for about half of Missouri's annual agriculture cash receipts. The division administers laws and programs designed to control and eradicate livestock disease and to maintain and enhance the integrity of the state's animal industries. This includes both mandatory and voluntary regulatory programs for beef and dairy cattle, horses, swine, poultry, sheep, goats, exotic and companion animals.

The state's progress in national disease control and eradication is due to the cooperative efforts of livestock producers, markets, practicing veterinarians, other agencies and animal health staff. Through these cooperative efforts, Missouri has achieved bovine Tuberculosis Free status, swine Pseudorabies stage V status and avian Pullorum-Typhoid Clean status.

The division also offers informative programs and publications on livestock quality assurance, food safety, environmental issues and disease control programs. In addition, the division operates two state-of-the-art diagnostic laboratories in Jefferson City and Springfield.

The Animal Health Division also works to:

- safeguard the livestock industry against the threat of bioterrorist attacks;
- identify and add value to Missouri livestock through an electronic animal identification system;
- inform cattle producers about quality assurance, targeted breeding and cow herd management;
- increase awareness and understanding of environmental issues that affect production agriculture;
- present informative programs on marketing and food safety to small poultry producers; and
- inspect Missouri meat processors to supplement existing USDA inspections.

Grain Inspection and Warehousing Division

The Grain Inspection and Warehousing Division is comprised of two programs that administer the Missouri Grain Warehouse Law, the Missouri Grain Dealer Law, and the United States Grain Standards Act. These laws promote and protect commerce in the interest of grain producers, merchandisers, warehousemen, processors and consumers. They also promote a uniform official inspection system for the orderly marketing of grain.

This division also collects and disburses funds for nine commodity merchandising programs.

Grain Inspection Services Program

The grain inspection services program is designated under the United States Grain Standards Act to officially inspect, grade and weigh all grains that have established standards.

The program provides four primary services: (1) official sampling is used to take a representative sample of grain from a particular lot; (2) official inspection is used to determine and certify the type, class, quality or condition of grain; (3) weighing certification is used to supervise the loading, unloading and weighing containers of grain; and (4) chemical analysis is used to determine the protein or oil content of grain and to determine the existence of mycotoxins in grain. Services are provided at inspection offices in Kansas City, Laddonia, Marshall, New Madrid and St. Joseph.

DR. TAYLOR WOODS
Director
Animal Health Division

RICH KAISER
Director
Grain Inspection

The program is self-supporting and operates entirely on fees charged for inspection services performed.

Grain Regulatory Services Program

The grain regulatory services program protects the public interest by auditing grain warehouses and grain dealers to determine grain obligations and financial solvency.

The program enforces Missouri's Grain Warehouse and Grain Dealer laws so producers are assured of storing or merchandising their grain with licensed, bonded, reputable and financially stable grain businesses. The program annually licenses approximately 200 warehouses and 450 grain dealers and conducts more than 1,000 audits and investigations.

Market Information and Outreach Division

The Market Information and Outreach Division works to position the department as a state and national leader in providing information and outreach to both agriculture and non-agriculture audiences.

The division provides educational resources and market information needed to improve the economic environment for Missouri producers and increase public knowledge and appreciation of agriculture in Missouri.

The Market News Program

Producers need an unbiased, reliable, accurate and timely source for livestock and grain market news to remain competitive and help them make wise and profitable marketing decisions. The Market News Program guides producers in production planning and provides a more even playing field in the marketplace. Market news staff report prices from 22 livestock auctions and 15 grain markets in Missouri. Reports are also generated from direct sales and voluntary producer participation. To reach more customers with up-to-date market information, the division publishes daily market figures on the Internet, while continuing to publish a Weekly Market Summary.

The Outreach Program

The Outreach Program provides targeted information about agriculture and the department's programs and services to educate, inform and engage the public. The program works to increase Missourians' knowledge of the economic, historical and social value of agriculture.

Outreach staff work with Missouri youth, encouraging them to pursue agricultural degrees and careers through the Missouri Agribusiness Academy, the Missouri Youth Livestock Grading and Judging Contest, Building Our American Communities grants and educational scholarships. The program also helps them build marketing and communications skills by participating in the Marketing AgriMissouri Products Contest.

The division serves as a liaison with Missouri agricultural commodity associations, publishes current contact information for agriculture commodity groups, coordinates commodity merchandising council elections and prepares official proclamations. The division also works to help producers identify opportunities to improve overall quality and market value of livestock in Missouri. Producers have the opportunity to participate in the Show-Me Select Heifer program and value-added calf programs.

Plant Industries Division

The Plant Industries Division is comprised of four bureaus and two programs, which together administer 14 separate state laws and cooperate in the administration of four federal laws. These laws facilitate agricultural production and marketing and provide consumer and environmental protection for Missouri citizens by regulating animal feeds and seeds, providing necessary certifications for interstate and international shipment of agricultural and forest products, ensuring plant pest protection for crops and forests, establishing grades and standards for fresh fruits and vegetables and regulating the use of pesticides.

Bureau of Feed and Seed

The bureau administers the Missouri Commercial Feed Law and the Missouri Seed Law.

The feed law regulates the manufacture, distribution and labeling of commercial feed products in the state. Random inspections, sample analysis and label review of feed products and feed ingredients ensure that livestock producers and pet owners receive the feed product guaranteed on the label.

The bureau, in partnership with the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, provides the inspection reports and regulation involved with preventing Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE), commonly called mad cow disease, in Missouri. The bureau also provides labeling assistance and investigates complaints related to animal feed.

The bureau regulates seed products offered for sale in the state. Seed is inspected, sampled, tested and labels are reviewed to ensure the product meets the labeled guarantees as to test date, origin, purity, germination and other claims that are made. The bureau cooperates with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's seed regulatory and testing branch in regulating the interstate movement of seed.

Bureau of Pesticide Control

The bureau administers laws for registration, distribution and use of pesticides. All pesticides sold and used in Missouri are regulated by the Missouri Pesticide Registration Act.

Bureau personnel inspect pesticides for proper labeling and registration and investigate misuse.

The Missouri Pesticide Use Act allows the bureau to certify commercial, noncommercial and private applicators and public operators. The act also provides for licensing pesticide dealers and pesticide technicians.

Bureau of Plant Pest Control

The bureau administers laws to control insects, plant pests and plant diseases.

The bureau administers the Missouri Plant Law, which mandates controlling harmful insects, plant pests and plant diseases through surveys, quarantines, nursery and greenhouse inspections and certification. The law also enables interstate and international shipments of Missouri plants and plant products.

As a service to Missouri beekeepers, the bureau works under the Missouri Apiculture Law to inspect and certify honey-bee colonies. These procedures are required for interstate shipment of honey-bees.

Bureau of Integrated Pest Management

The Integrated Pest Management Bureau administers the Boll Weevil Eradication Program, the Sustainable Agriculture Demonstration Award Program and the new Organic Certification Program.

In 2000, Missouri cotton growers voted to join the national effort to eradicate the boll weevil, a damaging cotton pest. The Missouri Cotton Growers Organization is working with the Southwest Boll Weevil Eradication Foundation to implement eradication efforts in Missouri with oversight from the Missouri Department of Agriculture. This is a grower-funded program paid through assessments on cotton production.

The Integrated Pest Management (IPM) program is designed to help farmers in an integrated approach to pest control. IPM encompasses all techniques available to reduce reliance on non-renewable resources, including pesticides.

Begun in 1995, the Sustainable Agriculture Demonstration Award Program provides grants to Missouri farmers to help them test, evaluate and adopt sustainable agriculture practices on their farms. Projects must be designed to reduce dependency on non-renewable resources, such as minerals and petroleum, and protect and conserve natural resources, such as soil, air and water. A main objective of the program is to provide the opportunity for Missouri growers to demonstrate innovative techniques in sustainable agriculture.

The Organic Certification Program certifies organic producers and processors in accordance with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Organic Program Standards. This program also provides resources and information to producers who are interested in organic production, one of the fastest growing agricultural markets.

Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Inspection Service

The inspection service consists of two programs: (1) shipping-point inspections assure producers of fruits and vegetables that their products meet quality grades, and (2) terminal market inspections assist wholesalers in gaining restitution for products that fail to meet purchase agreement quality standards.

Forest Resources Program

This program administers the Missouri Treated Timber Law to help ensure that consumers are purchasing quality treated wood products. Companies that produce or sell treated wood products are required to be licensed. Routine inspections and sampling are conducted at these facilities to verify state requirements are met.

The program also helps conduct the annual gypsy moth survey, a cooperative program between state and federal agencies to monitor for this exotic forest pest. The Missouri Department of Agriculture, the lead agency in this effort, annually places about 6,000 traps throughout the state to monitor for the gypsy moth's presence.

The forest resources program also administers laws associated with noxious weed control and eradication. The Missouri Weed Statutes identify the responsibilities for preventing the spread of 11 noxious weeds species and provide for counties to work cooperatively with the director of agriculture to help control noxious weeds.

Laboratory Support

Laboratories are maintained for analytical support to the seed, treated timber and commercial feed programs and other programs.

Weights and Measures Division

The Weights and Measures Division maintains surveillance of commercial weighing and measuring devices. The programs administered by the division protect buyers and sellers when goods and services are exchanged.

The division's programs are operated in accordance with the National Institute of Standards and Technology. The division also is a member of the National Conference on Weights and Measures and the National Fire Protection Association.

Device and Commodity Inspection Program

The program's field personnel inspect, as required by Missouri statutes, large and small scales, grain hopper scales, taxicab meters, odometers, timing devices, fabric measuring devices, milk for quantity determination, prepackaged merchandise and method of sale of commodities.

The program enforces the Missouri Egg Law and the Missouri Unfair Milk Sales Practices Law.

Petroleum/Propane/Anhydrous Ammonia Program

The program combines a variety of services. Under the program, petroleum dispensers, petroleum terminal meters and metered fuel delivery trucks are tested for accuracy; service station pumps are inspected for accuracy and safety; LPG installations in public institutions and bulk and manufacturing plants are inspected; LPG carburetion in passenger vehicles, school buses and trucks is inspected; metered LPG delivery trucks are checked; and storage and handling of anhydrous ammonia are monitored.

Metrology Program

The metrology program conducts tests and calibrates and certifies field standards for state agencies and private institutions. The state metrologist is the official keeper of Missouri's primary standards of mass, volume and length.

RON HOOKER
Director
Weights and Measures

Laboratory Support

Petroleum samples are collected by field personnel and submitted for testing. The petroleum laboratory analyzes gasoline, kerosene, heating oils and diesel fuel to make certain they meet state quality and safety standards.

The Moisture Meter Laboratory ensures the accuracy of grain moisture measuring devices and other equipment.

Department of Conservation

Brought into being by public demand for better management of the state's wildlife and forest resources, the Department of Conservation was created in 1937 by an amendment to the Missouri Constitution. It is headed by the Conservation Commission, whose four members, no more than two of whom may belong to the same political party, are appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. They serve without compensation for staggered six-year terms. The commission appoints the department director, who in turn appoints the staff. The staff is selected on the basis of training, experience, ability and character.

Two deputy directors assist with programs and activities carried out by divisions of fisheries, wildlife, forestry, protection, private land services, outreach and education, resource science, administrative services, and human resources. An assistant director provides leadership for special projects and initiatives assigned by the director (notably legislative liaison and partnerships with other entities), and supervises the policy coordination section. This section investigates issues and recommends actions in support of the director and staff, involving strategic planning, environmental coordination, public opinion, and geographic and social analysis.

The department's principal sources of revenue are receipts from the sale of hunting and fishing permits, and the one-eighth cent conservation sales tax. Funds are also received on a matching basis from federal aid to forestry, wildlife, fisheries, under provisions of the Endangered Species Act and from one-time grants and contracts.

Department funding was increased in 1977 when voters approved a constitutional amendment for an addition to the state sales tax, earmarked for conservation use. Since then the department has acquired approximately 462,000 acres of public land for wildlife, fisheries, and forestry conservation and public recreation, and has expanded many programs-notably conservation education, law enforcement, forestry, fisheries, wildlife and private land services, and activities dealing with endangered species, non-game wildlife and natural areas.

tions in support of conservation and land acquisitions, trades and easements.

The information technology section provides strategic direction for the department's information technology assets. It is responsible for managing those assets; defining technology solutions to meet business needs; and supporting use of those assets, which include all computer hardware and software systems, telephone systems, two-way radio and other telecommunications systems, and the coordination of those systems with other state agencies.

The business and support services section is responsible for the business administration activities of the department. It maintains liaison with the State Treasurer, State Auditor, Office of Administration and Department of Revenue in the performance of these activities. It is responsible for revenue collection, accounts payable, accounting, purchasing, budget, payroll, data processing, inventory control and reimbursement documentation for federal aid programs. It is also responsible for distribution of hunting and fishing permits statewide to retail businesses for sale to the public. Revenue from the conservation sales tax, hunting and fishing permits, federal reimbursement, public use areas, sale of timber, publications and surplus property is received and deposited in the state treasury for department programs.

It is responsible for procurement, repair and disposition of vehicles, marine and other mechanical equipment; management of aircraft operations; operation of a distribution center and warehouse for publications, products and media loan services; operation of offset printing, mailing and sign production services; buildings and grounds maintenance services; coordination of the department's earthquake/emergency preparedness plans; and administration of the employee uniform/clothing policy.

The design and development section administers the department's construction and development program and is responsible for development and maintenance of areas owned and/or leased by the department.

The section consists of two units: engineering and construction. The staff consists of professional engineering, architecture, land surveying, construction and support staff in the areas of drafting and computer applications. All work is highly specialized to meet the needs of the department's resource programs. Typical capital improvements projects are the development of wetlands, reservoirs, hatcheries, buildings, nature centers, river and lake public use access areas, stream corridor improvements and hunter safety training facilities.

The engineering unit handles all aspects of design and development of capital improvement projects including-performing investigations, feasibility studies and environmental assessments; preparing design drawings and contract specifications and administering construction contracts. Boundary, construction and topographic surveys of all land acquisition and development projects are performed under the direction of the division's registered surveyors. Support staff provide technical assistance in the areas of computer applications; state-of-the-art AutoCAD drafting applications; and construction quality control. The cartography unit archives all lands acquired and produces various area maps. The construction unit maintains department facilities, and its skilled construction crews construct countless special projects throughout the state.

To effectively design and develop the department's diverse projects, staff combines experience in the fields of survey, soil mechanics, hydrology, river hydraulics, structural, architectural, mechanical, electrical, environmental, computer, CAD, drafting, construction, quality control and maintenance. This unique combination of engineering expertise and biological understanding allows creation of outdoor recreational developments that blend with the surrounding environment and enhance and expand resource habitat.

Creative thinking and innovative solutions by staff are the norm in coming up with original designs and new applications of existing techniques, such as covered floating docks at reservoirs to provide disabled user fishing access; automated control systems at river pump stations; ingenious wetland water control structures; rock-lined levee sections to work with instead of against flood waters; special light switch sensors in office buildings to lower utility costs; and disabled user accessible boat loading platforms at stream and river access ramps.

Fisheries Division

Missouri has about 1,163,000 surface acres of water comprised of nearly 900 public lakes (24% of surface acres), 486 miles of Mississippi River and 553 miles of Missouri River (22% combined), almost 16,000 miles of other permanent streams (8%), over 39,000 miles of intermittent streams (3%) and about 500,000 private lakes (43%). These waters support rich and diverse aquatic communities that are used, enjoyed and appreciated by millions of people each year. Fishing is one of the most popular and economically important uses of these waters. Each year, Missouri's 1.2 million sport anglers (16 years of age and older) make about 11.8 million fishing trips and generate more than 1.6 billion dollars in economic activity.

The Fisheries Division's mission is "to professionally manage the fish and associated aquatic plants and animals of Missouri for the use and enjoyment of the people." Its goals are to: maintain aquatic ecosystem integrity and protect aquatic biodiversity; provide fair, responsive services; provide quality fishing; and increase the number of people engaged in the use and enjoyment of the state's aquatic resources.

To carry out this mission and pursue these goals, the division has fisheries management staff in the department's eight regions. Management efforts are supported by five coldwater fish hatcheries, five warmwater fish hatcheries, a Stream Unit and central office staff. The division has 190 permanent and term employees and varying numbers of temporary employees.

NORMAN P. STUCKY
Fisheries Division Administrator

Regional fisheries management staff (headquarters in Cape Girardeau, Columbia, Kansas City, Kirksville, St. Joseph, St. Louis, Springfield and West Plains, and other staff in the Camdenton, Chillicothe, El Dorado Springs, Hannibal, Lebanon, Neosho, Sullivan, Clinton and Sedalia offices) are responsible for monitoring and maintaining the quality of the aquatic resources, managing the public fisheries resources for quality fishing, providing technical stream and lake management advice to private landowners and other public agencies, providing and assisting with public information and education programs, assisting with other department programs and representing the division and department on matters pertaining to the aquatic resources in their region.

The five warmwater hatcheries (Blind Pony, Chesapeake, Hunnewell, Indian Trail and Lost Valley) rear the fish needed to stock public waters, suitable private lakes, and waters used for special fishing events and aquatic resources education. Their staff also develop methods of rearing endangered species. The five coldwater hatcheries (Bennett Spring, Maramec Spring, Montauk, Roaring River and Shepherd of the Hills) rear the trout needed to stock public waters. Their staff are also responsible for stocking and managing the popular Bennett Spring, Maramec Spring, Montauk and Roaring River trout parks. The fish pathologist diagnoses and, when appropriate, treats diseases and parasites in public and private waters and for private, state and federal fish hatcheries.

The Stream Unit is responsible for working cooperatively with the Missouri Department of Natural Resources on administering the Stream Team and Volunteer Water Quality Monitoring programs, producing and distributing Stash Your Trash litter bags to canoe liveries, and providing stream training and technical services to regional division and department staff and other agencies.

The division's central office staff direct and administer division programs, work on the acquisition and development of public fishing and boat access areas, administer the Community Assistance Program and Corporate and Agency Partnership Program, administer Federal Aid grants, coordinate angler recognition programs, develop and revise technical and popular written materials, distribute a weekly fishing report during the fishing season, and provide administrative support for division and department staff.

ROBERT L. KREPPS
Forestry Division Administrator

Forestry Division

The Forestry Division is responsible for management and protection of the state's forest resources. Major program objectives are to improve rural fire protection in all areas of the state; urge and aid forest landowners and forest industries to adopt practices designed to ensure sustainable forests; ensure the proper management and sustainability of public forest lands; and cooperate with public and private agencies in the control and abatement of major attacks of forest insects and diseases.

Some forestry facts: About 13.4 million acres or thirty percent of the land areas of Missouri is covered by commercial forest land. Eighty-four percent of the commercial land is owned by about 200,000 owners. Approximately three-fourths of this forest land is oak-hickory type, five percent is shortleaf pine and oak-pine types and the remainder is in cedar and bottomland hardwoods. Missouri's forests support a large forest products industry with about 1,000 manufacturing plants producing lumber, railroad ties, cooperage, cedar and walnut items (including gunstocks and veneer), charcoal and other products. Over $3.5 billion per year is generated from processing forest products. Missouri leads the nation in the production of charcoal, cedar novelties, gunstocks, walnut bowls and walnut nutmeats.

Division personnel and volunteer rural fire departments annually suppress approximately 4,000 wildfires which burn 60,000 acres of forest and grassland. Although fire control efforts are concentrated in the more heavily forested counties in southern Missouri, protection is provided statewide. Efforts continue to improve rural fire departments statewide and increase fire control efficiency.

Assistance is provided to rural fire districts and volunteer fire departments. Technical assistance, training and federal excess equipment are available at no cost to cooperating fire organizations. Federal legislation provides some funding to qualifying fire organizations on a matching basis. A rural forest fire equipment center is located in Lebanon. The center acquires inventories and distributes federal excess property to rural fire departments.

"Operation Forest Arson" is a program to combat the high number of arson-caused wildfires. This program is combined with the Smokey Bear fire prevention campaign to educate school children.

Through a cooperative program with the U.S. Forest Service, technical assistance is provided to private woodland owners. This service is available statewide and includes tree selection and planting advice, forest management recommendations, forest products utilization and marketing assistance and wildlife management recommendations.

The forest health protection program ensures the continuing health of the forest resources through survey and detection, pest and control evaluations and public information. Pests are monitored and infestations reported through a network of trained citizen "forest keepers." Impact and control evaluations are accomplished through formal damage surveys using both ground and aerial mapping techniques. Public information includes diagnostic clinics, pest workshops, monthly status reports and handouts on common pests.

Tree Resource Improvement and Management II is a cost share program that provides "seed" money for establishment or extension of holistic community forestry programs including tree establishment and tree maintenance and care. The department provides 60% of total costs of projects up to a maximum of $10,000 for activities such as tree inventory, pruning, hazard tree removal, tree research care and tree planting.

Assistance is provided to forest landowners on resource availability, market information, new technology and training. Individual businesses are encouraged to improve utilization of forest resources and reduce output of residues through efficient environmentally acceptable manufacturing methods.

Since the department was established, over 580,000 acres of forest land have been acquired and are managed as sustainable forest ecosystems. Forest management results include biodiversity, watershed protection, wildlife habitat, forest products and recreational opportunities.

To encourage forest and wildlife plantings, 5 to 7 million seedlings of 70 different tree and shrub species are produced at the George O. White State Forest Nursery to fill over 13,000 orders from Missourians. Every fourth grade student in the state receives an Arbor Day seedling produced at the nursery. Residents can order planting stock after November 1, for delivery the following spring at planting time.

The State Forestry Law was passed by the General Assembly in 1946 to encourage stable and permanent management of privately-owned forest lands. It strengthened department efforts to protect woodlands from fire and timber theft and to assist in forest management, as well as providing partial tax deferment on lands classified as forest crop land.

To be eligible for classification, forest land must conform to the following: market value of the land must not exceed $400 per acre; tract size must be 20 acres or larger; and the owner must agree to follow basic forest management requirements designed to keep the land in permanent forest production.

Land classified as forest crop land through 1974 is assessed for taxation purposes on a valuation of $1 per acre; subsequent classification at $3 per acre. Classification continues for a period of 25 years. To offset the loss of county taxes, the law provides for the department to reimburse counties based on a payment of 75 cents per acre per year on state-owned classified lands and 50 cents per acre per year on privately-owned classified lands. When timber products are cut for sale from classified forest crop land a yield tax on the amount sold is paid by the owner to the department.

Human Resources Division

The Human Resources Division is responsible for development and administration of a department-wide human resources program. It assists in recruiting, selecting and retaining a qualified, dedicated work force. In doing so, it administers a compensation and classification program; group life, medical, accidental death and dismemberment and dependent life insurance programs; maintains the department's official employee records; and administers the department's safety program, including workers' compensation.

Outreach and Education Division

The Outreach and Education Division is dedicated to helping Missourians connect with nature in our state in a variety of ways. The goal is to educate young and old about how to sustain a healthy environment, make good use of fish, forest and wildlife resources and also enjoy nature-based outdoor recreation.

One of the division's most popular works is the Missouri Conservationist magazine, a source of conservation ideas that has been free to adult Missourians since 1938. More than 450,000 people now receive the magazine directly. A newer quarterly section in the magazine aimed at youth, Outside/In, is also produced in special bundles for school children throughout the state.

The website at www.missouriconservation.org has grown tremendously in the past several years as a handy source of conservation information. Highlights include maps and tips for conservation areas to visit, the Missouri Conservationist online, a calendar of events for each region of the state, seasonal hunting and fishing reports, and links to special programs such as Grow Native! and No MOre Trash! A weekly news release, All Outdoors, provides outdoor information on a statewide basis, while a more local perspective is provided through media specialists working directly with news media in each region.

Television viewers can catch Missouri Outdoors, the department's Emmy Award-winning TV show on channels throughout the state. The TV story collections, along with many other conservation videos, are also available free to schools and public libraries. Missourians can also learn about subjects as diverse as how to fish, create excellent wildlife habitat, follow hunting regulations and identify snakes through the division's many free brochures and booklets. In addition, the popular Natural Events Calendar, conservation books and videos are also available at low cost at our conservation offices and nature centers, nature shop catalog or online website.

An outstanding network of conservation learning centers helps bring people and nature together across the state. Nature centers in Blue Springs, Jefferson City, Kirkwood and Springfield and visitor centers in Andrew, Taney, St. Charles and St. Louis counties offer unique nature exploration programs. Staff also teach at the WOW museum in Springfield. The Discovery Center, located in the heart of Kansas City, offers a new approach to learning by featuring six workshops that offer hands-on instruction to school groups and individuals in a building that highlights energy-efficient design. The Jerry J. Presley Conservation Education Center on the banks of the Current River in Shannon County hosts workshops for teachers and others who want to learn more about Missouri ecosystems. Teachers take away practical information and a bit of inspiration to strengthen their own students' understanding of, and caring for, our natural resources.

Scheduled to open in 2004 are two conservation learning facilities: a new St. Louis area visitor center with outdoor exploration stations near the junction of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers at Columbia Bottom, and a new conservation learning center in Cape Girardeau that will feature the natural history of the region as well as hands-on outdoor skills.

Conservation education staff also work with teachers and administrators at public, private and parochial schools, colleges and universities, other governmental education agencies, as well as youth leaders and community leaders to ensure that Missouri's natural resources can be sustained in a healthy environment for generations to come. Services include: developing and distributing a variety of teaching materials correlated with testing needs; assisting with teacher workshops and courses; and providing demonstration teaching and outdoor learning opportunities. Staff works with school leaders who want to use their own outdoor classrooms, which enable students to learn in an "outdoor laboratory" based on natural habitats.

Conservation materials available to teachers and students include a preschool publication Conservation Seeds, a series for K-2 students in a quarterly print format, and Habitat Packs for 3rd and 4th grade classes that focus on streams, forests, prairies and wetlands. A quarterly conservation education newsletter for teachers, The Resource, is sent to more than 12,000 educators throughout the state.

Another important part of the outreach and education effort focuses on teaching people the skills to enjoy Missouri's outdoors safely and responsibly. As more Missourians grow up in urban landscapes, they have less contact with the natural world. They also feel less and less at home there. The division's outdoor skills specialists work to give Missourians of all ages direct experience in nature-based activities such as camping, fishing, hunting, birding, canoeing, trapping and orienteering. By working with other conservation education staff, the outdoor skills staff teaches not only the hands-on skills, but also an understanding of what it takes to create the healthy habitat on which that skill depends. Outdoor skills staff work with teachers and youth leaders to provide hands-on conservation skills for students. They also create special classes for adults.

The outdoor skills staff also works with conservation agents to coordinate the many volunteers who provide hunter education training. In 1988, that training became mandatory for all persons born on or after January 1, 1967, as a prerequisite to purchase any firearms hunting permit. Since 1988, more than 430,000 people (about 30,000 per year) have been certified to hunt in a safe and ethical way.

Learning to safely handle firearms is part of the training, but hunters also need places to practice. In response to demand, the department in 1972 began to develop shooting ranges that meet or exceed national safety standards for shooting range design. Five staffed training center ranges and numerous unstaffed conservation shooting ranges have been created to provide Missourians with opportunities to practice their skills using firearms and archery equipment. The training centers also provide classroom opportunities for other conservation education.

Private Land Services Division

The mission of the Private Land Services Division is "to help Missouri landowners achieve their land use objectives in ways that enhance the conservation of Missouri's natural resources." The health of much of our state's natural resources is dependent on the land stewardship of private landowners, as approximately 93% of Missouri's landscape is in private ownership. Providing sound natural resource information and technical assistance to these private landowners is critical to long-term sustainability of our forest, fish, and wildlife resources. The Private Land Services Division includes a staff of resource professionals dedicated to working with private landowners to improve forest, fish, and wildlife conditions on their property.

We promote the wise use of fish, forest, wildlife, and natural communities through voluntary participation, information, education, and financial assistance. The Wildlife Habitat Improvement Program (WHIP) provides information, seed, and other materials to private landowners for wildlife habitat improvement. The LAWS (Landowners Assisting Wildlife Survival) program provides a cash incentive to landowners for leaving strips of standing grain next to permanent wildlife cover in production agricultural land. This is a two-year program that provides an idle strip of land that is very beneficial to wildlife next to a crop field. A multifaceted cost share program provides incentive payments to landowners for implementation of selected natural resources management practices.

Private Land Services personnel strive to provide prompt, professional assistance to landowners in the evaluation of natural resource conditions and recommend appropriate management and improvement techniques. Private Land Conservationists provide one-on-one assistance, tailoring management recommendations to the land use goals of the landowner and site specific natural resource needs. Teams of resource professionals from all MDC Divisions, work collectively and independently with landowners and other resource partners to address important resource issues. Urban Watershed Conservationists provide assistance to urban developers, homeowners, city and county planners, and others to address land use issues relating to urban sprawl and development. The Wildlife Damage Control Program provides assistance to landowners experiencing damage to their property by wildlife, including beaver, coyote, otter, Canada geese, deer, and others. Wetland Services Biologists provide specialized technical assistance to landowners to restore and manage wetland habitats.

Establishment of partnerships with state and federal agencies, commodity groups, agribusinesses, and conservation organizations help achieve shared natural resource goals. MDC has established effective working partnerships with Natural Resources Conservation Service and Farm Service Agency to integrate fish, forest and wildlife considerations into implementation of Farm Bill programs that include Conservation Reserve Program (CRP), Wetlands Reserve Program (WRP), Environmental Quality Incentive Program (EQIP), and Wildlife Habitat Improvement Program (WHIP). To complement funding available through Farm Bill programs, MDC offers cost–share that is tailored to regional resource needs and landowner interest. Close coordination with the Department of Natural Resources' Soil and Water Conservation Program maximizes private land resource progress through programs of both agencies. Liaison efforts with Agriculture agencies and groups have fostered communication and understanding of fish, forest, and wildlife issues within the agriculture and conservation communities. These efforts are enhanced through participation in serving on Farm Bill committees, task force groups, and Ag advisory councils.

Private Land Services Division also promotes the development of alternative economic opportunities that benefit Missouri landowners and our natural resources. Native warm season grass planting and management assistance is provided through the Grassland Biologists on thousands of acres each year. "Grow Native!" is a complementary native plant program that encourages the use of native plant materials in backyard landscaping and large acreage of native community restoration. This program also works to increase the supply of true Missouri native plant materials through the Missouri Ecotype Project (MoEP). Production and sale of these native plant materials provides potential alternative economic opportunities for Missouri landowners.

We encourage a land stewardship ethic among landowners, strive to increase community involvement, build trust and heighten understanding of the department's overall mission. Our "field force" of Private Land Conservationists, Wetland Services Biologists, Wildlife Services Biologists, Urban Watershed Conservationists, and Wildlife Damage Control Biologists are strategically located throughout the state to provide routine contact with landowners, communities, civil clubs, churches, schools, and others. This interaction with Missouri's citizens provides the foundation for building understanding between different interest groups and ensures a well informed approach to conservation of our natural resources.

Protection Division

The Protection Division is composed of uniformed conservation agents and support staff. Conservation agents, by official designation, serve as department representatives in their assigned areas and must be well versed on all department programs. They have responsibility for enforcing all statutory enactments related to fish, wildlife and forestry, and rules and regulations promulgated by the Conservation Commission. Conservation agents are certified as peace officers to enforce all state laws on lands owned, managed or leased by the department. Many agents are also commissioned by the U.S. Department of the Interior to enforce federal conservation laws.

Resource law enforcement is very important in managing Missouri's fish, forestry and wildlife resources. Conservation agents are assigned to each county in the state and are responsible for carrying out a wide range of wildlife-related law enforcement duties. Patrols by vehicle, boat and foot are routine. Agents depend heavily on help from local citizens to report violations.

Although law enforcement is the division's primary function, only about half of an agent's time is devoted to that activity. Other duties include hunter education, resource management assistance to landowners, media contacts, and educational and informational programs to youth and adult groups. Numerous surveys, censuses and special field studies are conducted for state and federal fish and wildlife research personnel.

Many special programs require personal contact with individual landowners. Preparation of land-use plans, delivery of seed and wildlife plantings, inspection of developments and periodic progress reports are involved in wildlife habitat improvement and fish stocking programs. Preliminary contacts with landowners and arrangements for wildlife management projects, lake development and other large-scale department projects are delegated to agents. Frequently, community interest and participation in department projects designed to provide or increase local recreational opportunities result from encouragement or initiation by agents.

In addition to fish, wildlife and forestry program duties, many agents present regularly scheduled informational or educational programs on radio and television. A number of newspapers in the state carry weekly outdoor columns prepared by conservation agents.

Although Hunter Education and shooting ranges are administered by the Outreach and Education Division, conservation agents work closely with outdoor skills supervisors to ensure that these important programs reach as many citizens as possible in an efficient manner. Agents help to recruit, train and supervise Hunter Ed volunteers. They also personally instruct many of the Hunter Education courses held in their assigned districts.

Two important programs administered by the division in cooperation with the Conservation Federation of Missouri are Share the Harvest and Operation Game Thief.

Share the Harvest provides Missouri deer hunters opportunities to donate all or part of their harvest to needy Missourians. Meat processors, charitable agencies and sponsors work with hunters, the Conservation Federation, Missouri Department of Conservation and corporate sponsors including Shield of Shelter Insurance, Bass Pro Shops and others to distribute much needed meat to hungry families. Over 96,000 pounds of venison were donated by 1,826 deer hunters during the 2002 firearms deer seasons.

Operation Game Thief provides an avenue for concerned citizens to report poaching through a centralized toll-free hotline. Rewards for information leading to the arrest of violators are available. Since the inception of this program in 1982, over 4,000 arrests have been made with information supplied by concerned citizens. Although rewards are offered for information leading to arrests, less than two thirds of citizens supplying information resulting in arrests actually request rewards. This program has been shown to be an effective means of public awareness and involvement in protecting the natural resources of Missouri.

Resource Science Division

Resource Science Division, established in fall 2002, integrates strengths of the research functions previously separated in the Forestry, Fisheries, Natural History and Wildlife divisions. Our mission is to provide the science-based information needed to conserve, appreciate, and effectively manage the living resources of Missouri. The challenge will be to anticipate the knowledge needed in the next few decades and provide a constant flow of new information collected in the context of a changing ecological and social environment.

The objective of the Resource Science Division is to establish a nationally recognized science-based model for conservation by 1) ensuring ongoing development of a comprehensive and integrated understanding of Missouri's living resources and their values to society, 2) using accumulated knowledge to inform and recommend conservation actions, 3) evaluating the biological and social impacts of conservation actions, and 4) reporting emerging knowledge of Missouri's living resources.

An integrated focus in Resource Science Division is organized around five systems and functions rather than traditional disciplines. These include a Terrestrial Systems and an Aquatic and Wetland Systems group as well as Resource Science groups delivering services for Environmental Health, Science and Policy Support, and Management Evaluation and Support. In addition, the Resource Science Division is dedicated to greater delivery of management assistance, enhanced transfer of resource information, and integrated functions by positioning resource scientists in the field to ensure science support for management evaluation efforts.

Scientists at the Resource Science Center in Columbia coordinate long-term surveys of plant and animal populations and collect the data needed for population management recommendations. The Resource Science Division also is responsible for ensuring that issues associated with species of conservation concern (both rare species and invasive species) are addressed and fully integrated into the functions of the other MDC divisions. Efforts include status assessments, education and outreach, and management, restoration, and recovery guidance on public and private lands.

The Terrestrial Systems and the Aquatic and Wetland Systems groups increase our understanding of plant and animal habitat relationships, monitor population status, and develop harvest and species management recommendations. Staff are regularly involved with specialized projects to monitor wildlife diversity across our state. Projects such as the Flora of Missouri, in cooperation with the Missouri Botanical Garden, are documenting the range and status of the over 3,000 plants found in Missouri. In the Terrestrial Systems group, annual population surveys of reptiles and amphibians, songbirds, mourning doves, wild turkey, white-tailed deer, and bats secure the knowledge necessary for regulations and habitat conservation. Similar knowledge is provided by the Aquatic and Wetlands Systems group for fisheries management (ranging from headwaters to big rivers and ponds to reservoirs), wetland and waterfowl management (ranging from North American continent to Missouri conservation area), fish communities, watersheds, stream-riparian-floodplain systems, interactions among predators and prey, and species of concern.

Science and Policy Support staff work to link and improve access to databases documenting Missouri's rich biodiversity. A web-based archival and retrieval system allows all employees to enter data and metadata. Data standards and protocols ensure that all users enter and retrieve data with a standard set of queries. By employing these new data management systems and protocols we ensure that databases are usable and accessible. A centralized data warehouse allows users to use advanced querying techniques on large amounts of data.

The Resource Science Division manages Missouri's Natural Heritage Program, which tracks the status and occurrence of 1,121 species of conservation concern and high quality natural communities and ensures that they are carefully documented, mapped, and updated. In 2002, more than 1,200 new records of endangered resources and natural communities were mapped and documented, and updates and corrections were made on approximately 2,600 of the 16,141 total records. We are converting this system to Biotics software, which will allow users more accessibility and usability for conducting queries. Information generated from specialized inventories and surveys are recorded, mapped and documented on the Natural Heritage Database and the Missouri Fish and Wildlife Information System (MoFWIS), a searchable database of habitat, management and distribution data on more than 700 species. Both databases are available on the department's website.

Post season harvest surveys, attitude surveys, and public-use surveys ensure better understanding of the opinions and attitudes of our constituents as well as biological information needed to make the most informed management decisions concerning Missouri's natural resources.

The Resource Science Division is responsible for ensuring statistical rigor in design and analyses of project proposals and monitoring and evaluation projects through biometricians who ensure proper study designs and use advanced statistical techniques to analyze and interpret complex natural resources questions. They also provide an integral link to applying adaptive resources management to field projects within the department. Advanced training ensures that all employees realize the importance that statistics can play in helping managers design projects that will meet the study objectives.

The Environmental Health unit primarily provides the services that ensure monitoring and protection of Missouri's forest, fish, and wildlife resources. Primary functions include protecting aquatic biodiversity, water quality, forest health, fish health, and providing responsive service to agency staff, the public, and other agencies and entities. Investigations of fish kills and water pollution complaints (working in cooperation with Department of Natural Resources), fish flesh contaminants monitoring (working in cooperation with Department of Health), coordination of a variety of intra- and interagency projects, and providing expertise and guidance on water quality issues also are Environmental Health responsibilities.

Resource Science Division is leading management evaluations by developing protocols, study designs, and funding to evaluate conservation practices with the goal of "learning by doing." This structured approach to information gathering is needed to ensure that the results of management and policy actions are measured and appropriately linked to resource-related outcomes. To better provide services in this regard, Resource Science Division is establishing four field stations that will conduct studies related to better understanding and managing fish, forest and wildlife resources in agricultural systems, big rivers and wetlands, grasslands and forests. In further support of resource managers, the Management Evaluation and Support group provides the specific focus on research and monitoring to support field staff. This involves coordinating, designing, and conducting surveys, monitoring efforts, and applied research aimed at understanding the impacts of management actions on Missouri's natural resources.

Outside partners are essential to accomplishing the Resource Science Division mission. Opportunities to expand research, surveys, inventories and workshops come through active competition for extramural dollars as well as pooling funds with outside partners. The division uses federal aid reimbursement, small grants and cooperatively funded research to gain a better understanding of the fish, forest and wildlife and their habitats.

Wildlife Division

Wildlife Division is responsible for the management of Missouri's wildlife resources to best serve the long-term interests of the people of the state. The roles that Wildlife Division hold in the department are: (1) balancing wildlife resource needs with public expectations, (2) advocating wildlife conservation, (3) actively seeking ways to inform peers, cooperators and citizens about wildlife stewardship, (4) gathering information to improve management of wildlife, and (5) providing opportunity for all citizens to use, enjoy, and learn about wildlife.

General Counsel

ROBBIE BRISCOE
Internal Auditor

The division manages 372 publicly-owned or leased areas totaling 500,923 acres. Annual accomplishments include: active management of 2,000 acres of glades, 30,000 acres of grassland/prairies and 5,200 acres of savannas; completion of 5,000 acres of timber stand improvement; supervision of 54,500 acres of cropping directly and through permittee farmers; manipulation of 24,000 acres of old fields; and provision of 54,000 acres of wetlands as habitat for resident and migratory wildlife. Public use activities on conservation areas include hunting, nature viewing, hiking and camping. Wildlife Division administers the department's Natural Areas Program and provides specialized support for wildlife diversity, endangered species, outdoor recreation, and habitat restoration activities.

Division field staff provide a wide range of wildlife management assistance to private landowners. On-ground assistance is provided through 1,600 contacts each year. Field staff contact over 11,000 Missouri citizens a year through workshops and programs, providing technical advice and assistance. Initiatives are being implemented to target species such as prairie-chicken and bobwhite quail that are on decline due to wide-scale changes in land use. Since the department was created in 1937, wildlife restoration programs have been conducted for many species, including wild turkey, whitetail deer, peregrine falcon, osprey, river otter, and ruffed grouse.

General Counsel

The general counsel is responsible for provision of legal advice and opinions. All litigation in which the department, commission or a staff member is a party is handled by the general counsel. Other functions include services to prospective donors and their attorneys, assistance in employee training and the review of administrative regulations.

Internal Auditor

The internal audit function provides an independent review and evaluation of designated department activities. It assists the commission and director by furnishing analyses, appraisals, recommendations and pertinent information concerning the activities reviewed.

The Department of Corrections is an agency dedicated to public safety through the successful management and supervision of offenders on probation, in prison and on parole. The department's responsibility is to administer the sentence set by the court in ways that promote public safety at the lowest cost to taxpayers. Offenders assigned to the department are successfully managed by ensuring they are supervised at the correct custody or supervision level. A cadre of over 11,000 well-trained correctional professionals committed to the vision, mission, values and professional principles of the department, assesses each offender's criminal history, evaluates community and institutional conduct and enforces compliance with court orders and department rules. This mixture of on-going assessment, classification, referral to supervision strategies and assignment to basic habilitation interventions are several of the key methods used to promote sober, responsible, productive and law-abiding behavior. When offenders are held accountable for their behavior and responsible for their actions the public's safety is enhanced.

In all, the department is responsible for the care, custody and supervision of approximately 90,000 adult offenders in Missouri. There are currently more than 30,000 adult felons confined in Missouri's 21 correctional facilities and two community release centers. The department also supervises 11,500 parolees and 48,000 probationers across the state.

There are four divisions within the department. The management of felons and selected misdemeanants committed by the court are divided between the Division of Probation and Parole and the Division of Adult Institutions. The Division of Offender Rehabilitative Services provides program services to felons assigned to probation, parole or prison. All staff related activities and special program services are provided through the Division of Human Services.

The department utilizes strategic planning to promote continuous improvement and excellent customer service at all levels of the organization. This commitment to continuous improvement ensures that offenders under the supervision of the Department of Corrections are assigned to the correct custody classification and receive those services that reduce criminal behavior and promote the longest lasting public safety through a measurable reduction in recidivism and revocation.

The strength of the department of Corrections is found in the women and men who serve around the clock to ensure that offenders are supervised at the most appropriate level with the greatest care for public safety. To assist our staff in their challenging work, the department has developed policies and procedures based on statutes, case law and the best practices in the field.

To ensure that policy and procedure are representative of the needs of staff and adhere to legal obligations, the department assigns task forces and work teams to research different operations to review and rewrite policy. This practice allows the department to not only examine its operations, but receive input from those who are required to implement the policies and procedures prior to approval by administrators and the executive staff.

Training is essential to building and maintaining a professional staff. The department has established a Training Academy with its headquarters in Jefferson City and Regional Training Centers in Farmington, Jefferson City and St. Joseph. A full time professional training staff works at each center to ensure that training is delivered consistently, accurately and completely across the state. Staff outside the training centers is also enlisted to assist and conduct training in specialized topics. This brings the professional expertise of our working staff to newly hired employees.

Sometimes overlooked are the line staff and supervisors dedicated to providing quality correctional supervision to offenders. Working together these units of probation and parole officers, correctional officers, clerical, cooks, substance abuse counselors, caseworkers, maintenance, teachers, treatment staff and others blend into a team that holds offenders accountable for their behavior and responsible for their actions. Through a combination of supervision strategies and classification criteria, offenders are supervised in ways that address public safety concerns while meeting the needs of the offender.

Supervision levels in the community range from intensive to minimum supervision, and community corrections programs such as electronic monitoring and halfway houses. In the prisons there are five custody levels that range from minimum (C-1) to maximum (C-5). Using objective criteria to establish supervision and custody levels ensures offenders of corresponding need and disposition are supervised and confined safely and securely with appropriate programming.

The employees of the Missouri Department of Corrections are among the finest in the field of corrections. They are active in their local communities both in developing professional relationships with citizen groups and maintaining their role as citizens building strong communities. We take our jobs seriously and are committed to making Missouri a safe and secure place for its citizens and visitors.

Offender Management

Risk management is the process of classifying offenders according to the risk they currently present to the public so as to assign them to the institutional custody or community supervision level that best monitors their conduct. Department staff assesses, evaluates and intervenes as necessary to ensure offenders are managed in ways that best promote public safety in accordance with the sentence of the court.

Risk management is accomplished in a variety of ways. Pre-sentence investigations assist the court in determining sentencing options. Individualized institutional treatment programs for substance abusers, sex offenders, and others that experience mental health or other special problems provide offenders with the necessary skills for successful reintegration into society. Supervision strategies such as intensive supervision, electronic monitoring, day reporting centers, and residential facilities provide offenders with a structured environment for increased supervision. Restorative justice programming in institutions and field offices allow offenders an opportunity to repair the harm their crimes have caused individual victims and their communities. The institutional classification system ensures felons in prison are confined at custody levels that maintain facility security and public safety.

Office of the Director

The director of the Missouri Department of Corrections is charged with shaping legislation, formulating policies and procedures, and informing the public to effectively and efficiently guide and implement objectives and goals that increase the public's safety. Included in the Office of the Director are units that participate in these endeavors, notably Victim Services, Constituent Services, Information Systems, Inspector General, Legal Services, Labor Relations, Legislative Affairs, and Public Information.

Restorative Justice

Missouri is the only state that requires inmates to perform restorative justice initiatives that assist victims and victimized communities as part of their sentence to prison. As examples, inmates from Boonville raised over 30,000 pounds of vegetables and fruits for a local food bank. In Jefferson City the inmate population raised over $5,000 for local charities through their can recycling program and other charitable events. In Moberly, inmates assemble personal transportation vehicles for individuals who have lost their legs to disease, crime and landmines throughout the world. Inmates in Cameron grow flowers to adorn the lunches for local Meals on Wheels programs and in Farmington inmates build wheelchair ramps for not-for-profit agencies.

Probation and Parole offices sponsor a variety of restorative justice programs for offenders under their supervision living in the community. Reparative Boards are comprised of citizens from the community specially trained by department staff to meet with offenders concerning their behavior under supervision. They provide the court with an assessment of offender needs and how the offender can best repair the harm they have caused the victim or the community. Offenders attend victim impact panels in correctional facilities and probation and parole offices to demonstrate how crime personally affects victims. The panels are made up of crime victims who relate their personal stories and how criminal behavior has changed their lives.

Information Systems

The Office of Information Systems has the responsibility of managing and operating all data processing activity in the department. Several mid-range computers, in conjunction with a statewide telecommunications network, service more than 11,000 employees at 112 locations containing approximately 6,400 workstations while also providing online access to approximately another 1,500 users throughout several additional criminal justice agencies. The department's offender databases are integrated with other state agency information to comprise a criminal justice support capability throughout the state. Additional responsibilities include coordination of all telecommunications and radio resources in the department.

Inspector General

The Office of the Inspector General is charged with objectively examining department operations to ensure they are in compliance with established policy and procedure. This is accomplished through the Internal Affairs Unit and the Compliance and Accreditation Unit. Internal Affairs is the investigative arm of the department and conducts investigations in response to reports of suspected violation of statute and department policy and procedure. The Compliance and Accreditation Unit develops, reviews and audits current department practices to ensure department policy and procedure is being followed. This unit also recommends and coordinates department policy and procedure revision.

Constituent Services, Labor Relations, Legislative Affairs, Public Information and Victim Services

These five sections of the Office of the Director provide and coordinate information to specific audiences concerning the operation of the department and its divisions.

Constituent Services processes inquires from offender families, advocacy groups, the Governor's office, legislators and the public. Through a customer-focused approach, the office provides consistent, accurate, timely information and direction about offenders and the department's policies, procedures and practices. Constituent Services also keeps department administrators informed about issues generated from constituent contacts.

The Labor Relations Office serves to ensure that effective and continuous communication exists between the department and the certified bargaining units that represent employees. This office also identifies and resolves labor management issues, and serves as the link to the Office of Administration with the responsibility of interpreting and applying state guidelines governing labor management.

Legislative Affairs responds to inquiries from legislators and other interested parties regarding legislation and its impact on department operations.

The Public Information Office addresses inquiries from the news media, the general public, and other interested parties. This office also generates department publications, videos, promotes department activities and oversees the Internet web page. Within the organization, Public Information coordinates and develops organizational plans to improve internal communication.

The department's Office of Victim Services (OVS) was established to ensure core services and accurate, timely information are provided to Missouri crime victims. The OVS ensures victims are notified of changes in offender's status in accordance with RSMo 595.209. The OVS enhances accessibility to department operations including parole hearings, victim impact statements for pre-sentence investigations, reasonable protection from offenders or others acting on behalf of offenders. The OVS provided services including notification, crisis intervention and referrals to approximately 36,000 victims of crime. During CY02 the office sent 23,782 notification letters and assisted approximately 8,500 victims by telephone.

Division of Human Services

The Division of Human Services consists of Human Resource Management, Training and Employee Development, Employee Health/Wellness/Safety, Religious/Spiritual Services, Volunteer/Intern Programs, Budget/Planning, Research and Evaluation, Planning, Fiscal Management, and General Services. This division provides support to the other divisions of the department. A professionally trained work force, where safety and wellness is practiced as a part of the job is essential to carrying out the vision, mission, values and professional principals of the department. The Division of Human Services is tasked with recruiting a diverse professional work force, maintaining that qualified work force, improving the work environment of employees and communication between management and staff. Oversight of the budget process, strategic planning and fiscal management is essential to support the operation of the department. Additionaly, the division has oversight of the institutional food operations, major new construction and maintenance projects, the management of the vehicle fleet, and central office business office and warehouse functions.

Fiscal Management Unit

The Fiscal Management Unit is responsible for departmental financial activities and the coordination of those activities with other state agencies. The unit is a liaison with the State Treasurer, State Auditor, Office of Administration and the department of Revenue in the performance of these activities. This unit oversees implementation and maintenance of a variety of complex accounting systems including property control, audit procurement, accounts payable, revenue accounting, contract management and coordination, offender canteen and the offender banking system. In addition, the Fiscal Management Unit provides oversight, support and assistance to institutional and field Probation and Parole districts, Missouri Vocational Enterprises and other regional business offices throughout the state.

Budget, Research and Evaluation

The Budget Unit is responsible for developing, preparing and presenting the department's annual budget request. Budget staff coordinate with the operating divisions to determine the resources required to implement agency programs and strategies. The unit then develops funding requests that accurately reflect the department's strategic planning goals and objectives. Through analysis of research data on program outcomes and population trends, the unit provides guidance on ways to use department resources more effectively and efficiently. The Budget Unit presents the budget request to the Governor's Office and then works closely with the General Assembly to provide information during the appropriations process. This unit also coordinates fiscal note responses for the department.

The Research and Evaluation Unit is responsible for providing research data and analysis to support the entire department of Corrections. They track population growth of all offenders and maintain statistical data required for the evaluation of department programs and trends. The unit provides research information required to support the strategic planning process and all departmental decision-making. They analyze data and develop scenarios to respond to requests for fiscal note information. The unit also provides research and survey data to agencies within and outside state government and reviews outside research requests.

Training and Employee Development

The Training Academy develops, coordinates and delivers preservice, in service and management/supervisory training to staff in each of the department's divisions. The academy consists of 61 full-time staff and a cadre of part-time volunteer trainers who perform their duties in one of the department's three regions: Central, Eastern and Western. The academy promotes the personal growth, professional development and imparts the departmental vision to all staff members to help them achieve the short and long term goals of the agency. To this end, the regions conduct pre-service basic training courses for all new corrections officers, non-custody staff, and correctional services trainees. In addition, more than 300 in-service and management courses are presented annually. The academy is also responsible for Probation and Parole safety training and a variety of other certification programs. The academy designs and develops all departmental curricula.

Employee Health/Wellness/Safety

This section addresses job-related health and safety concerns with focus on control of communicable and infectious diseases: It also oversees and implements occupational safety concerns and coordinates and promotes employee wellness activities. The Workforce Violence Coordinator is also part of this unit and provides staff with assistance following a traumatic workplace incident.

A 1997 study by the U.S. Department of Justice found that correctional officers had the fourth highest incidence of violent incidents per 1,000 workers during a recent five-year period. Correctional personnel also have higher levels of work-related stress than other occupations. The department established a Workplace Violence Prevention Unit as part of the Employee Health/Wellness/Safety Section to develop and implement department wide programs to respond to staff's needs as they relate to violence in the workplace.

Human Resource Management

This section processes all personnel and payroll actions, maintains personnel records, clarifies classification issues and coordinates the recruitment and hiring of employees within the guidelines of the Missouri State Merit System. The Human Resource Management Section also handles employee relations and participates in labor relations discussions.

Religious and Spiritual Services

Religious programming opportunities and pastoral care services are provided for inmates in correctional centers. Department chaplains assigned to every institution work with volunteers from various denominations to ensure that constitutional rights of inmates to practice the religion of their choice is facilitated within the limitations of a secured setting. One goal of religious and spiritual services is used as a restorative and transforming tool for inmate change, growth and social reintegration.

The impact of religious and spiritual services for inmates has been shown to decrease conduct violations and promote inmate institutional adjustment. Inmates attending religious and spiritual programming are more likely to engage in activities that promote positive attitudes and behaviors needed to take advantage of other inmate programs. During Fiscal Year 2002, twenty-four percent of the inmate population produced 352,543 religious service attendance units. Chaplains and volunteers made 27,598 contacts with inmates unable to participate in religious service due to confinement restrictions, with an additional 19,469 general pastoral contacts and 1,186 family emergency notices.

Volunteers/Interns—Special Events

Volunteers serve throughout the department and are recognized as non-salaried employees. They receive an orientation to the department and supervision by department staff. Volunteers provide a variety of services and programs in areas such as substance abuse, twelve step programs, literacy, tutoring, parenting skills, anger management and religion. Volunteers provide access to community programs including NAACP, Vietnam Veterans, Kiwanis, Toastmasters, American Legion and other such organizations. Volunteer members of these organizations bring the programs to the institutions.

This section also coordinates student internships from a variety of educational institutions and colleges around the state. The Volunteer Unit also coordinates, implements and monitors special events and programs involving the department, other state agencies and community partners.

General Services

General Services is responsible for the purchasing, storage and distribution of commodity food items to the department's institutions statewide from two regional warehouses. This section also oversees the operations of institutional food service including regional cook-chill facilities, major new construction and maintenance projects within the department, and management of the statewide departmental vehicle fleet. The General Services Unit also oversees the central office business office and warehouse functions.

Division of Offender Rehabilitative Services

The Division of Offender Rehabilitative Services is responsible for developing and delivering interventions and services necessary for offenders to correct their criminal behavior at each point in the department's supervision continuum. These services and interventions include Academic and Vocational Education, Medical Contractual Services, Mental Health, Missouri Sexual Offender Program, Missouri Vocational Enterprises, and Substance Abuse Services. These program services allow corrections professionals throughout the department to fully utilize the supervision continuum to better resolve offender issues such as literacy, sobriety and employability. Without remediation these factors would impede their return to the community as law abiding and productive citizens. The public's safety is best served by creating increased offender accountability.

Adult Basic Education

A basic education is an integral part of the rehabilitative process. In order to prepare inmates for successful reintegration to society and to reduce recidivism, offenders without a high school diploma or equivalent (General Educational Diploma Certificate [GED]) are required by statute to participate in Adult Basic Education classes. The mandatory academic educational program provides offenders an opportunity to obtain the GED certificate and make positive and measurable progress in academic education. It also provides a correctional environment in which inmates are constructive while confined and productive when released. The individually prescribed curriculum utilizes both computer programs and text based materials. Classes range from basic literacy and English as a second language through post-secondary education. The academic education section offers the following programs for the offenders to prepare themselves for release:

Assessment: Staff at intake centers screen and properly diagnose all offenders prior to school assignments.

Adult Education: Classes that assist the offender in working toward the GED certificate.

Literacy: Classes providing specific materials and instruction for those with limited English proficiency and reading skills.

Title I: Provides supplemental instructional services for educationally disadvantaged students under age 21.

Special Education: Provides appropriate education for offenders with disabilities through the age of 21.

Youthful Offender Program: Eligible offenders receive life and job skills through the pursuit of post-secondary education while incarcerated and continue through pre-release and parole.

The Missouri department of Elementary and Secondary Education certifies all department teachers and administrators.

The Mandatory Academic Education Statute, Section 207.690.10 Revised Statutes State of Missouri establishes that offenders must earn their GED certificate or exhibit a continuous good faith effort toward academic success to be eligible for parole. With this added emphasis on education and academic progress, the goal is that eighty percent of students served will show success in one or more areas of reading, math or language during a three-month period.

Currently, academic education can serve over 8,900 eligible offenders daily and during the past two fiscal years over 4,500 inmates have earned their GED certificates. Eighty percent of the inmates who take the GED test pass. This rate exceeds both the state and national average.

School based programs include a number of vocational training programs throughout the prison system. These programs include computer repair, automotive repair, business technology, electrical wiring, residential carpentry and plumbing, diesel mechanics and industrial technology, culinary arts and cosmetology among others. Additionally, School Based programs include training for offenders in computer refurbishing and repair and technical literacy. This specialized program is delivered in partnership with local community colleges. To help ensure that offenders are prepared to work, employability and life skills classes are available. This program is designed to provide skills vital to success in the work world such as communication, cultural diversity, conflict resolution, personal finance management and knowing how to find and keep a job.

Work Based programs are delivered via apprenticeships and on-the-job training delivered by the Missouri Vocational Enterprises (MVE) and through institutional jobs. MVE also provides skilled training programs to assist the offender to secure and retain meaningful employment upon release.

Community Based Connecting activities are designed to establish partnerships with state and community agencies. These activities provide access to services available that may help offenders and their families in the process of social reintegration in a free society. Additionally, these initiatives bring the department in contact with individuals from within the community to discuss offender reintegration strategies.

Missouri Vocational Enterprises

Missouri Vocational Enterprises (MVE) is responsible for 25 different industries in 11 correctional institutions throughout the state. At any one time MVE employs approximately 1,400 inmates who provide a variety of products and services for sale to state agencies, city and county governments, political subdivisions, state employees, and not-for-profit organizations. MVE's goal is to increase work and training opportunities for inmates. Profits generated by MVE sales are used to develop new products and create expanded vocational training opportunities.

One of MVE's most unique industries is the award winning Waste Tire to Energy program. Waste Tire to Energy involves department of Corrections inmates cleaning up illegal tire dumps around the state as identified by the Department of Natural Resources. The tires are then shredded by inmates into rubber tire chips, which are then mixed with coal to power the University of Missouri, Columbia's power plant. The clearing of the dumps reduces health hazards and prevents fires associated with illegal dumps. The mixture of chips and coal recycles waste, burns hotter and cleaner than coal alone thus reducing air pollution and saving the state fuel costs. Since the program's inception in March 1995, the department has recycled over 25,000 tons of tires at 25 different sites across the state.

Medical Services

By law the department is responsible for the health care of offenders in their custody. The Medical Services Unit oversees medical care, which have been provided on a contract basis since December 1, 1992. This managed care system stresses health care education, primary prevention, immediate identification of health problems and early intervention to prevent more debilitating chronic health problems. Medical units are located in every correctional center. Depending upon institutional size, the level of care ranges from daily, routine medical and dental sick call services to 24-hour care infirmaries. Chronic care clinics ensure those with chronic conditions are regularly assessed and provided continuous medical care by licensed nurses and physicians.

Mental Health

When inmates are sentenced to prison mental health needs are accessed during the intake process at the reception and diagnostic centers. This consists of a mental health screening and psychological testing to determine if intervention is needed and, if so, what measures should be taken to stabilize the offender's mental illness and assist with institutional adjustment.

The department works closely with the Department of Mental Health in three key programs designed for treating individuals with severe and persistent mental illness. There are 42 psychiatric hospital beds available at the Biggs Forensic Center at the Fulton State Hospital. This unit is occupied by individuals who are experiencing acute exacerbation of their mental illness. In addition, two specialized programs are available at the Farmington Correctional Center. The Social Rehabilitative Unit is comprised of 200 beds and is designed to provide a long-term structured environment. The Correctional Treatment Center provides intermediate to long-term psychiatric treatment for chronic mentally ill offenders within an inpatient setting.

An additional mental health program is available at the Special Needs Unit located within the Potosi Correctional Center. This program is designed to serve offenders with developmental disabilities and prepare them for return to general population in prison.

Psychological services are available in all institutions, ranging from individual and group therapy services to special programs for the chronically mentally ill.

Missouri Sexual Offender Program (MOSOP)

The director of the Department of Corrections is mandated by statute (RSMo 589.040) to develop a program of treatment, education and rehabilitation for sexual assault offenders. By department policy, the successful completion of MOSOP is mandatory for a release prior to an inmate's sentence completion date. The MOSOP program, consisting of approximately 12 months of therapy, is provided at the Farmington Correctional Center for men and the Women's Eastern Reception, Diagnostic and Correctional Center in Vandalia for females. The group for handicapped offenders, currently at MECC, will soon be transferred to ERDCC.

During the fiscal years of 1999 and 2000, 1,219 inmates attended MOSOP and 313 graduated from the program. In 2001 and 2002, 934 more attended, and 377 completed successfully. Those who failed to successfully complete were required to complete their entire sentence and were not released prior to that date. The department has also instituted MOSOP treatment in its field services to probationers and parolees.

The Sex Offenders Assessment Unit (SOAU), a 120-day pre-sentencing residential program, was established in FY94. It is designed to assess community risks and sex offender treatment needs. Information is then shared with the court for sentencing considerations. From 1999 through 2002, 409 offenders were assessed for the courts at the SOAU.

Regional Sex Offender Specialists, employed by the department, monitor a panel of private practitioners that provide treatment to offenders while on probation or parole. The courts or the Parole Board mandate outpatient treatment for these offenders.

Substance Abuse Services

The Department of Corrections provides a continuum of services for offenders who are stipulated for substance abuse treatment through court order or through a decision of the Board of Probation and Parole. The department manages nine substance abuse treatment centers in correctional facilities that house a total of approximately 2,800 residential intensive treatment beds. Missouri prisons also offer assessment and substance abuse education services and partial day treatment. Additionally, the department manages a myriad of community substance abuse treatment contracts through Probation and Parole.

In 1994, Senate Bill 763 authorized creation of three innovative drug treatment programs to tackle specific substance abuse problems. The Offenders Under Treatment Program, the Post Conviction Drug Program and the long-term treatment programs provide services for both male and female offenders. The Offenders Under Treatment Program is a six month treatment program for offenders whose substance abuse or dependency was a precipitating factor in their offense. The Post Conviction Drug Treatment Program is designed for probationers who have failed to complete treatment within the community. Long-term therapeutic community programs treat offenders with serious and chronic drug and alcohol addictions.

Boonville Treatment Center, Cremer Therapeutic Community Center, Farmington Treatment Center, Mineral Area Treatment Center, Women's Eastern Treatment Center, and Western Regional Treatment Center support short-term residential treatment strategies for offenders who are court-ordered through RSMo 559.115 for 120 day substance abuse programs. The Board of Probation and Parole also stipulates short-term treatment for parole violators and post-conviction offenders with substance abuse difficulties and addictions.

Maryville Treatment Center and Ozark Correctional Drug Treatment Program provide long-term therapeutic community treatment for court ordered offenders sentenced according to RSMo 217.362 as well as offenders whose substance abuse treatment is stipulated by the Board of Probation and Parole. Long-term substance treatment in these facilities averages 12 months in length. Women's Eastern Treatment Center, Western Region Treatment Center, and Missouri State Penitentiary also provide long-term therapeutic community substance abuse treatment. Residential Substance Abuse Treatment for State Prisoners grant from the department of Justice assists in the funding of two substance abuse treatment programs, the Ozark Correctional Drug Treatment Program in Fordland Missouri, and the RSAT Six Month Program at Western Regional Treatment Center. Missouri State Penitentiary's program is unique in the department of Corrections in providing substance abuse therapeutic community services for maximum security male inmates who apply for and voluntarily participate in treatment.

The National Institute of Corrections and the United States Department of Justice endorses the therapeutic community modality as the most effective treatment regimen for offender management in correctional settings, and for facilitating the effective implementation of substance abuse treatment services in prisons. The therapeutic community model's efficacy derives from its emphasis on both individual and group responsibility and the development of pro-social values and behaviors among offenders.

In May 2002 the Department of Corrections implemented a new five point Substance Abuse Classification Analysis (SACA). The SACA score is a substance abuse needs score that is utilized to provide guidance for appropriate referral and placement in substance abuse services for offenders. Between July 1, 2002, and March 30, 2003, approximately 72 % of offenders in institutions were administered the SACA received scores indicative of the need for intensive substance abuse treatment.

In FY02 5,244 offenders successfully completed treatment at an Institutional Treatment Center. During that same year 3,016 inmates completed substance abuse education and approximately 1500 offenders completed relapse prevention programs in institutions. Additionally, over ten thousand offenders participated in 12 Step meetings within correctional institutions.

The Division of Offender Rehabilitative Services Substance Abuse Services Unit maintains a strong partnership with the Department of Mental Health Division of Alcohol and Drug Abuse as well as numerous private substance abuse service providers in the state of Missouri. The Division of Alcohol and Drug Abuse has certified all of the long-term treatment programs in institutions and the women's treatment programs. Several short-term male institutional substance abuse treatment programs are also working to meet those state certification standards for substance abuse treatment.

Drug screening via urinalysis is an important part of the department's zero tolerance approach toward drug use by offenders. Every month approximately 13,000 urine samples are collected from offenders in prison and under supervision in the community. The samples are screened by the department toxicology laboratory and assist corrections professionals in assessing, evaluating and referring offenders to appropriate substance abuse programs within institutions and in the community.

To further combat the illegal use of drugs in prison the department has enhanced efforts to intercept drug transactions and deliveries. The combination of drug intervention, drug screening, and treatment strategies enforces the department's zero tolerance standard for inmate drug use.

Division of Adult Institutions

The Division of Adult Institutions is responsible for supervision and management of the state's 21 adult correctional institutions. The division operates safe, secure and humane institutions for the confinement of individuals committed to serve a prison sentence. By Missouri law, a felon must be 17 years of age or older or certified as an adult by the Circuit Court and have a sentence of not less than one year to be committed to the division.

Incarcerated inmates are accountable for civil conduct and compliance with institutional rules. Inmates are also required to make payments from their individual inmate accounts for court ordered fines or judgments to the Crime Victims Compensation Fund. In addition, each inmate is required to engage in work, school or treatment on a full time basis throughout their period of confinement in order to prepare them to be productive, law-abiding citizens upon their release. Inmates are encouraged to make positive contributions to society and to take responsibility for repairing the harm caused by their past criminal actions by participating in community service, restorative justice activities and impact of crime on victims programs. Over ninety-seven percent of all offenders committed to the division to serve a sentence are released at some point. Preparing inmates to transition successfully from prison to the community is an investment in public safety and reduces future victimization.

Division of Probation and Parole

The board is comprised of seven full-time members appointed by the governor, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate. During their six-year terms, members determine the release of individuals from confinement in the Division of Adult Institutions through parole or conditional release. Parole hearings are held at each correctional center monthly. If a release date is set the board determines whether placement in release strategies such as electronic monitoring, residential facilities and community release centers is appropriate. The board stipulates special conditions in order to address specific offender needs and improve the opportunity for success under supervision. They also monitor the supervision of offenders in the community and return those offenders to prison who are a risk to the community.

The chair of the board is designated by the governor and is the chief administrative officer in charge of operations, funds, expenditures, Interstate Compact Services for supervision of parolees and probationers and chief spokesperson for the board. Four assistant division directors are responsible for Parole Services, Field Services, Community Corrections and Administrative Services. They report directly to the chair of the Board of Probation and Parole.

The board also investigates and reports to the governor on all applications for pardons, commutations of sentence, reprieves or restorations of citizenship. The board may include information relating to the applicant along with appropriate recommendations.

tracking of their progress for the board. The institutional parole officers report their findings to the parole board prior to an offender's parole hearing. The institutional parole staff and parole analysts assist the parole board as they conduct hearings. The officers work with the offenders to develop supervision plans as they prepare for their release from confinement.

Institutional Parole Offices are located at the following correctional centers: Algoa, Boonville, Central Missouri, Chillicothe, Crossroads, Farmington (satellites at Potosi and Mineral Point), Fulton Reception and Diagnostic Center (satellite at Cremer Therapeutic Community Center), Jefferson City, Maryville Treatment Center, Missouri Eastern, Moberly, Northeast, Western Missouri, Ozark, South Central, Southeast, Tipton, and at Diagnostic and Reception Centers in Bonne Terre, St. Joseph, and Vandalia.

The Caseload and Release Manager Units are responsible for processing reports, release orders and correspondence in order to prepare and maintain offender files for the board. The Violator Unit oversees the violation process for those offenders who are not successful under supervision in the community. Offenders who violate their parole supervision may be brought back for treatment, referred to a more structured supervision strategy or returned to prison.

Field Services

The Division of Probation and Parole is divided statewide into regions for the effective management of probationers and parolees. Regions are made up of a network of local district offices and, in some instances, are supported by satellite offices.

The Western Region encompasses eight district offices in Kansas City and offices in Independence and Belton.

The Northwest Region has two district offices in St. Joseph (a satellite office in Maryville), and offices in Chillicothe (satellite in Brookfield),

MARLENE WEATHERFORD
Western Region

Trenton, Liberty, Warrensburg and Sedalia (satellite in Marshall).

The Southwest Region consists of two offices in Springfield (satellite in Aurora) and offices in Joplin, Neosho, Nevada, Branson (satellite in Ozark), West Plains, Lebanon, Eldon and Camdenton.

The Central Region has district offices in Columbia, Jefferson City, Moberly (satellites in Macon and Kirksville), St. Charles, Lincoln, Warrenton, Troy (satellite in Warrenton), Hannibal, Union and Fulton.

The Southeast Region consists of district offices in Rolla, Hillsboro, Cape Girardeau (satellite in Perryville), Farmington, Sikeston, Kennett (satellites in Charleston and New Madrid), Caruthersville, Potosi, Dexter and Poplar Bluff.

The Eastern Region consists of ten district offices in St. Louis City and St. Louis County with a satellite office in St. Louis City.

The Field Services Section supervises probationers in the community assigned to the division by the courts, offenders released under supervision by the parole board and offenders from other states through the Interstate Compact. There were over 63,000 offenders under the supervision of the division in the community at the end of Fiscal Year 2002, including more than 11,600 parolees and 48,600 probationers.

In order to reduce recidivism, probation and parole officers continuously assess and evaluate the offenders assigned to them, and supervise at a level consistent with their risk to re-offend. The probation and parole officer effectively balances treatment and supervision strategies necessary to manage offender risk with the needs and interests of victims and communities. This supervision process consists of a number of critical activities including:

- Accurate and ongoing assessment of offender risk and need
- Development of effective supervision and treatment plans
- Restorative justice practices
- Use of appropriate sanctions and strategies to minimize risk and maximize the potential for successful outcomes

Reparation Boards have been developed in partnership with the courts to help offenders gain insight into the impact of crime on the community. They recommend specific reparative activities to be completed by offenders to restore or repair the community.

Offenders are ordered to perform community service hours by the court as part of their reparation to the community. During FY02 offenders completed 349,566 hours of community service. Other offenders are required to compensate victims of crime, pay court costs and make restitution to individual victims.

Across the state Citizen Advisory Boards (CAB) provide valuable assistance to their communities. CABs, composed of citizens who live and work in their communities, promote an environment for offenders to gain the skills they need to be productive, and law-abiding citizens. CABs fund special programs such as financial management courses, alcohol awareness programs, prison tours, Adopt-A-Highway clean-up projects, Alcohol Related Traffic Offender Programs and community service projects. Some CABs sponsor scholarships to high school and college students or have established endowments at local universities and colleges. Still other CABs provide transportation and interest-free loans to offenders for treatment, education and employment needs.

Community Corrections

The Community Corrections Section oversees two community release centers and coordinates a number of community-based correctional programs that supervise and manage offenders in the community. These facilities, programs and services assist with the supervision of probationers assigned by the courts and with the reintegration of parolees upon release from prison. The following programs are designed to provide additional treatment, intervention, sanctions and structure for offenders:

PAUL CASPARI
Assistant Division Director
Community Corrections

Superintendent, Kansas City

JANET SCHNEIDER
Superintendent, St. Louis
Community Release Center

- Local sentencing initiatives
- Community release centers
- Electronic monitoring
- Intensive supervision
- Contract residential facilities
- Targeted outpatient substance abuse treatment
- Targeted employment services
- Cognitive skills and case management services
- Community sex offender treatment and registration

The Community Corrections Section provides assistance and guidance to local jurisdictions in the development and operation of local sentencing. The combination of local assessment, treatment, supervision and short-term confinement enhances the department's ability to improve the success of supervision while involving the local community to a much greater degree.

The department's Command Center is a 24 hour a day, seven days a week communication center whose staff tracks offenders in the community on electronic monitoring, and in community release centers and residential centers. This unit was established to ensure that offenders assigned to community corrections programs maintain their curfews and adhere to other restrictions as required around the clock. Command Center staff conduct investigations for every serious rule violation. They issue arrest warrants should offenders fail to return to their assigned residence at the appointed time. Command Center staff also maintain regular contact with state and local law enforcement to develop leads and to ensure absconders are apprehended and returned to department custody without delay.

Community Release Centers in Kansas City and St. Louis are department facilities under the auspices of the Community Corrections Section. These facilities offer community-based programs and provide the department with transitional centers to manage and assist offenders requiring a supervised transition from confinement to community supervision. The parole board stipulates parolees for assignment to the centers based on their need for substance abuse treatment or a structured setting in which to develop work release programming as part of the release process.

Kansas City Community Release Center

The Kansas City Community Release Center (KCCRC) is a minimum security (C-1) facility located in the downtown area of Kansas City and has a capacity to house 300 offenders.

St. Louis Community Release Center

The St. Louis Community Release Center (SLCRC) is located just north of downtown St. Louis and has been in operation since April 1978. SLCRC has a capacity for 500 offenders.

Offenders assigned to the Community Release Centers are required to accept increased personal responsibility in finding and maintaining employment, obtaining medical care and obtaining educational or vocational opportunities through the Work Release Program. To offset the state's expense for these residential services, all offenders assigned to the community release centers contribute a nominal per diem charge to the Inmate Revolving Fund. The programs are structured to parallel the offenders' responsibilities after release to supervision in their local communities.

The Substance Abuse Treatment Program consists of addiction assessment and referral to local treatment providers to meet the needs of offenders based on their history of addiction and their need to practice relapse prevention strategies. Assessment and treatment sessions are scheduled to coincide with the offenders' off-hours from work.

BARNE PLOCH
Assistant Division Director
Administrative Services

The centers also serve as a secure location to assess offenders in St. Louis City and Jackson County who are at risk for revocation, especially those avoiding supervision. Temporary placement at the centers allows the board to consider other supervision strategies with a reduced risk to the community.

Administrative Services Section

The Administrative Services Section consists of the Division's Fiscal Management Unit, Personnel Unit, Central Supply Unit and Central Office Support Unit. This section provides planning and coordination with the other divisions of the department and other state agencies.

Fiscal Management is responsible for activities related to budget and planning, procurement, contract and lease management and legislative impact.

The Personnel Unit processes all payroll records, time and attendance records and other divisional personnel matters.

The Central Supply Unit oversees two warehouses in Jefferson City, the management of the division's vehicle fleet and maintains an inventory of sufficient supplies for staff.

The Central Office Support Unit provides switchboard, mailroom and environmental support for the staff at the division's central office in Jefferson City. This unit also facilitates the transfer of files to and from the Missouri State Archives within the Secretary of State's Office.

The Missouri Economic Research and Information Center (MERIC) provides comprehensive analysis of Missouri's socioeconomic environment at the local, regional and state levels. To achieve this, MERIC employs a wide array of tools, which include econometric models, geographic information systems and advanced statistical methods. On-going projects at MERIC include targeted development, economic and social impact assessments, industry and occupational analysis, career seeker products, and information on Missouri's demographic and economic trends.

Coupled with its analysis capability, MERIC maintains a comprehensive labor market database produced in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Labor. Data on employment/unemployment, wages, layoffs, labor availability, and a variety of other information designed to help understand the state's labor market conditions are regularly reported.

Ultimately, MERIC's mission is to provide accurate, relevant and timely information to decision makers and the public in order to facilitate a better understanding of Missouri's socioeconomic environment.

Economic Development Groups

Truman State Office Bldg.
Jefferson City 65101
Telephone: (573) 751-4241

These groups—Business Services, Community Development, and Workforce Development—work with local communities to help firms create jobs, increase sales, find and retain qualified workers, identify sites and obtain financial support to locate or expand in Missouri, as well as promote capital investment and the self-sufficiency of communities in the state.

In 2003, the department initiated a regional team approach for delivery of its economic development services to businesses, communities and workers across the state to ensure those services are provided efficiently and effectively, and that those services are accessible to all parts of the state.

Business Services Division

Truman State Office Bldg.
Jefferson City 65101
Telephone: (573) 751-4241

The Division of Business Services serves as the centralized point of contact for the attraction, development and financing of new and existing business in the state. The division serves as a business "ombudsman" for communication with other state agencies, connecting individuals and businesses with the appropriate agencies and services that can assist them. Implemented in 2003, the Division of Business Services was created by the merging of the former Divisions of Business Expansion and Attraction and Business Development. The reorganization was streamlined to increase efficiency and reduce costs, eliminate duplication of programs and services and expand outreach.

Business Services is divided into three functional teams that are responsible for the recruitment of new businesses, helping current businesses succeed and providing financial services for new and existing business in the state - Business Recruitment and Marketing, Business Success and Financial Services.

In coordination with these teams, the Division of Business Services works closely with the thirteen economic regions of the state to provide services that are customized to meet the needs of each region. Regional teams consist of members from the three agency teams and are designed to work with local leaders to develop strategies that are most suited to attract and retain jobs and businesses based on the economic needs of the particular region. The regional teams receive input from the Departments of Agriculture and Natural Resources as needed, and are able to quickly connect anyone who needs services with the proper agency or staff member who can assist them.

The Division also works with Innovation Centers, Missouri Enterprise and other organizations to assist in technology promotion, target industries and cluster development.

Business Recruitment and Marketing

The Business Recruitment and Marketing Team works to aggressively market Missouri as a great place to conduct business, both domestically and internationally. The goals of the team are to increase awareness of Missouri, locate and pursue leads of businesses with the potential to locate in Missouri and to increase the number of businesses and employees in the state.

PHIL TATE
Director
Business Services Division

Team members work to identify potential markets, develop market strategies and monitor trends. Marketing efforts include advertising, promotions, marketing trips, trade shows and other publicity programs to targeted businesses. Staff maintains a database, Missouri LocationOne, which showcases community profiles, buildings and sites. Staff works cooperatively with the assistance of The Hawthorn Foundation and the department's advertising/public relations consultant on many of these activities.

Team members make contacts with both domestic and global businesses that are considering Missouri as a location. Staff promotes the advantages of Missouri to companies nationwide by providing informational packets and through personal presentations and acts as a liaison with other state and local government agencies and development organizations in efforts to attract companies. Staff assists the Financial Services Team and Regional Team Leaders in the preparation of financial proposals, including training, tax incentives and infrastructure financing.

Business Success

The Business Success Team focuses efforts to help Missouri companies increase sales and become more successful, promote international sales opportunities and transition companies toward new technology and approaches to sustain economic competitiveness. The goals of the team are to increase the number of domestic and/or international sales by Missouri companies, assist a greater number of existing companies expand their operations throughout the state, and to increase the vitality and profitability of Missouri companies.

Team members work to help Missouri businesses reduce costs, locate markets and increase sales both in domestic and international markets. Staff works with existing Missouri companies and communities, helping to retain and expand job opportunities and investments with the help of a comprehensive array of services, programs and assistance. Staff works with community leaders to develop vital communication links with local industry and helps companies identify their specific needs. In order to facilitate job retention and/or expansion within Missouri communities, the Business Success Team provides assistance to Missouri businesses comprised of the appropriate resources available and offers solutions to business concerns.

To increase Missouri's global competitiveness and wealth for Missouri businesses, staff helps identify international companies through a variety of sources to increase international and domestic sales of Missouri-made products and services. Contact is also made with Missouri businesses to solicit their interest in developing and expanding exporting opportunities. The team helps to match international companies with products and services offered by Missouri companies as it assesses international potential, develops marketing strategies, conducts market research, counsels businesses, provides technical export assistance and assists with direct marketing. This information is shared with the Marketing and Promotions Team. To further assist in these efforts, marketing experts are maintained in Jefferson City; London, England; Düsseldorf, Germany; Tokyo, Japan; Seoul, Korea; Monterrey, Mexico; and Accra, Ghana.

The department places an emphasis on increasing the number of successful minority and women-owned businesses in Missouri. Staff helps to provide access to all appropriate state and federal programs designed to help them start or operate successful businesses. This personalized counseling assures a well-coordinated effort streamlined to cut through levels of bureaucracy.

Skilled business counselors provide counseling, advice and qualified referrals for detailed technical assistance and business counseling services for individuals seeking information and technical assistance to start a new business in Missouri as well as for existing small business owners seeking to expand their business or markets.

The team also works with partners such as the Innovation Centers and Missouri Enterprise, to assist in technology promotion, target industries and cluster development for the continued development of Missouri's knowledge-based economy.

Financial Services

The Financial Services Team provides custom and innovative financing uniquely suited to the needs of each project or business. The goal of the team is to increase the growth of business wealth throughout the various regions of Missouri and in specific targeted or clustered industries, as well as to increase the number of businesses, capital investments and employees in the state.

FRANK STOKES
Chair, Missouri Technology Corporation

The Financial Services Team works closely with the other teams to provide information on business financing and tax credit incentives designed to help businesses expand and locate in Missouri, helping our state compete effectively with other states and countries. By working with the state's businesses, private-sector financial community, public institutions and private investors, the department effectively generates attractive financing packages for new development in the state.

This team provides technical assistance for staff as it applies to the department's financial programs. All financial assistance and proposals available to companies are prepared and coordinated by the team, who also is responsible for administering all current and new grant, loan and tax credit programs.

Staff also assists in the development of financing program policies, procedures and promotional materials. Records maintenance of all financial proposals and obligations made by the division is conducted in this unit. Team members evaluate all applications for business incentive programs and make any appropriate revisions. They also review and evaluate tax credit applications.

Missouri Technology Corporation

The Missouri Technology Corporation was authorized by Section 348.263, RSMo 1994. The Board of Directors is composed of fifteen members, eleven appointed by the governor, for four year terms, from business and academia; the director of the Department of Economic Development; the president of the University of Missouri; a member of the Senate and a member of the House of Representatives.

Research Alliance of Missouri

The Research Alliance of Missouri was formed in January 2003 to help strengthen the relationship between Missouri's businesses and higher education and ensure a more prosperous future for Missourians.

The Research Alliance provides expertise and guidance in linking education and business, working together to coordinate research, pool resources, boost commercialization opportunities and provide more access to technology for Missouri businesses. Goals of the Research Alliance are to increase federal research dollars coming into Missouri, streamline the technology transfer processes, and increase commercialization of new products through direct interaction with Missouri companies to solve industry problems. The alliance will also allow businesses to communicate what their workforce needs are and how university research may best serve them.

The Research Alliance of Missouri is comprised of the chief research officers from universities and research institutions throughout the state, as well as leaders from organizations such as the Missouri Technology Corporation, Department of Economic Development, and the Department of Higher Education.

The alliance meets monthly to exchange ideas, share resources and make recommendations on steps that can be taken to increase the commercialization of new technologies.

Missouri Business Center

The Missouri Business Center (MBC) provides a centralized, single point of contact for individuals seeking information and technical assistance to start a new business in Missouri as well as for existing small business owners seeking to expand their business or markets.

MBC, created by the General Assembly in 1986, has as its core mission to ensure easy access to information on regulations for starting and operating a business in the state and technical assistance in complying with those regulations. In addition, the office serves as a small business "ombudsman" for communication with state agencies.

MBC is the centralized point of contact for information regarding state rules, regulations, license and permits required to do business in Missouri, as well as copies of required forms. In addition, skilled business counselors provide counseling, advice and qualified referrals for detailed technical assistance and business counseling services. Business counseling, assistance and information, including MBC's popular publication Starting A New Business In Missouri, is available through the web at: www.missouri development.org/mbac or by calling 1-888-751-2863. Information is also available on CD.

The center also monitors trends in small business and entrepreneurship; works with partner agencies, both public and private, to identify small business needs; and provides information on sources of Missouri-made products and services.

Minority Business

The department places an emphasis on increasing the number of successful minority and women-owned businesses in Missouri. Personal assistance is available to these owners to access all appropriate state and federal programs designed to help them start or operate successful businesses. This personalized counseling assures a well-coordinated effort streamlined to cut through levels of bureaucracy.

The mission of the Community Development Division is to increase the economic self-sufficiency and prosperity of Missouri communities and neighborhoods. Members of the group achieve this result by offering programs to promote community investment, redevelopment activities, planning and leadership development, infrastructure development and support to local governments and not-for-profit organizations.

Community Development Programs

The Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Program administers grants to cities with fewer than 50,000 population and counties with less than 200,000 population. The program is designed to improve local communities by providing funds to develop suitable living environments and expand economic opportunities, principally for low-and moderate-income persons. The grant process is open to all non-entitlement local governments and provides assistance in areas such as public facilities, housing, economic development, and downtown revitalization. Funds are provided through the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The Neighborhood Assistance Tax Credit Program (NAP) administers a tax credit designated for the betterment of communities and neighborhoods. The Neighborhood Assistance Act provides a tax credit incentive to encourage business participation in community development projects operated by not-for-profit organizations in areas such as crime prevention, community services, physical revitalization, job training, economic development, new generation cooperatives and education.

The Youth Opportunities and Violence Prevention Program (YOP) administers a tax credit specifically directed toward programs which are designed to prevent youth from engaging in violent behavior and enable youth to improve themselves through education, job training and apprenticeship activities. The tax credits are given to businesses and individuals contributing to an approved project undertaken by either a public or private organization.

The Family Development Account Program (FDA) administers a state tax credit that enables contributors to make donations to organizations that establish and run a Family Development or Individual Development Account project. The funds contributed are used to match low-income participants' savings accounts, enabling them to

The Historic Preservation Tax Credit Program aids in the redevelopment of Missouri's commercial and residential historic structures. The tax credit is equal to 25% of the total costs and expenses incurred during the rehabilitation of a nationally designated historic property or a property located in an historic district.

The Community Development Corporation Program assists in the development of CDCs — nonprofit organizations that promote the industrial, economic, entrepreneurial, commercial, and civic development of a community. The CDC program also offers a tax credit and grant program to encourage workforce development, housing development and many other CDC services.

The Neighborhood Preservation Program assists homeowners and developers that wish to renovate or construct residences for homeownership by providing state tax credits for housing renovation and or new construction. State statutes require that the program operate in certain qualifying and eligible areas of the state.

The Brownfield Redevelopment Program provides tax credits and grants for remediation of contaminated sites throughout Missouri. The program provides opportunities to redevelop once vibrant business and community sites that are currently underutilized or are vacant, thus bringing jobs and investment back into the area.

Missouri Community Betterment (MCB) is a program of immediate community self-improvement. It is an action program designed to increase community development efforts and economic growth by providing strategic planning technical assistance to those communities requesting help and incentives to promote meaningful and successful projects. In short, the purpose of Missouri Community Betterment is to encourage communities to help themselves.

The Enterprise Zone Program was established to provide certain tax incentives for companies locating in areas of the state, which meet certain distressed criteria. A key aspect of the program is development of a plan for redevelopment and renewal.

citizens to serve their communities. It is the mission of the Missouri Community Service Commission to nurture such volunteer efforts by fostering an atmosphere that enables citizens' service to prosper in communities across Missouri. By collaborating with volunteer organizations and state agencies, and by continuing to effectively administer National Service initiatives, the commission makes it possible for Missourian's to serve their communities.

The commission was established by an act of the Missouri Legislature in 1994 as a direct response to the National and Community Service Trust Act of 1993. Its twenty-five members are appointed by the governor and meet quarterly across the state. It has two primary functions, to award grants to local organizations enabling the establishment of AmeriCorps and other National Service programs and, to foster an "ethic of service" in all citizens, with special emphasis on youth.

The commission accomplishes these goals by operating as a "point" organization for promoting and recognizing service volunteers, and by supporting quality service projects. The Missouri Legislature passed a measure in 1998 allowing the commission to raise private contributions to assist in its work, thus enabling the commission to broaden its impact on the service and volunteer communities.

Overseeing the AmeriCorps program is the commission's primary responsibility. AmeriCorps, the domestic Peace Corps, engages citizens of all ages in projects ranging from tutoring, youth mentoring, public safety, housing rehabilitation, health care, environmental issues, and disaster relief. It gives communities and neighborhoods valuable human resources for addressing their most pressing civic issues, and gives the individual a way to serve their country. It has given thousands of Americans opportunities to increase their skills and earn money for college that otherwise would not have been available too them.

Any not-for-profit organization, local or state government, school district, or institution of higher education may sponsor an AmeriCorps program. AmeriCorps members serve for one year, full time (1,700 hours) or part time (900 hours). At the completion of their service commitment they receive a $4,725 education award (half that amount for part time service) that may be redeemed at a Title IV university, college, or trade school.

The AmeriCorps state program provides federal funds for living allowance and program administration. Sponsoring organizations are required to produce a one-third match, and should have sufficient capacity to operate personnel and accounting systems, comply with federal grant provision, and respond to federal reporting requirements.

The AmeriCorps Education Award Program provides a small amount of federal monies for administrative purposes. However, it frees sponsors from match requirements. Members may still receive a living allowance, but it is up to the sponsor to determine the source and amounts of those funds. Education Award programs are particularly well suited to work study and welfare reform initiatives.

AmeriCorps programs are designed to address specific issues and to achieve measurable objectives. Member activities must not duplicate the work of existing staff. Programs focus on education, environment, human needs, public safety, community and economic development and health.

The Missouri Housing Development Commission (MHDC), created by the 75th General Assembly, has invested almost $4 billion for rental housing developments, home mortgages, home improvement loans, loans to landlords for renovations, grants to neighborhood housing groups, and other housing programs. MHDC does not build or renovate housing itself; rather, it functions as a bank, providing financing directly to borrowers or through a network of private lending institutions.

The commission makes and ensures loans to non-profit and limited-dividend sponsors of residential housing for low- and moderate-income persons. The commission also makes funds available for the purchase of single-family homes, at below-market interest rates, by low- and moderate income persons. The funds for mortgage financing are provided through the sale of tax-exempt notes and bonds that the commission is authorized to issue.

Additionally, the commission is authorized to establish a revolving fund to make non-interest bearing loans to non-profit organizations to defray development costs of housing for low- and moderate-income persons. The commission provides advisory, consultative, training and educational services to non-profit housing organizations.

The commission also administers the federal Low Income Housing Tax Credit, state Low Income Housing Tax Credit and the Affordable Housing Assistance tax credit; and operates a housing trust fund for very low-income Missourians that serves to help prevent homelessness and provides emergency housing assistance.

The commission participates with the Department of Economic Development in preparing the state's Consolidated Plan.

The commission includes the governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, treasurer and six persons appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate.

broadening the appreciation and availability of the arts in the state and fostering the diversity, vitality and excellence of Missouri's communities, economy and cultural heritage.

Created by an act of the 73rd General Assembly, the Missouri Arts Council acts as the state's arts grant-making division providing financial assistance to nonprofit organizations across the state to encourage and stimulate economic and community growth and development through the arts. A division of the Missouri Department of Economic Development, MAC is the second oldest state-funded arts agency in the country, providing vital support and leadership to bring the arts to all the people of Missouri. The Missouri Arts Council board consists of 15 volunteer citizens from across the state who are appointed by the Governor, who also designates a chair and vice chair. The board meets regularly to provide direction in policy making and programmatic oversight.

Through funds from the Missouri General Assembly and the National Endowment for the Arts, MAC provides funding for quality arts programming in both large and small communities. Funding areas include: discipline program assistance (music, dance, theater, literature, electronic media, visual arts, multidiscipline, festivals), community arts, folk arts, arts education, minority arts, touring, mini grants, technical assistance, endowment building and renovation/construction.

Applicants must demonstrate that they have sound administration and financial management skills, and are capable of promoting the state-local partnership in arts activities to assure broad participation by both the applicant and the audience. Applicants include but are not limited to: community arts agencies, performing organizations, elementary and high schools, colleges, universities, museums, libraries, chambers of commerce, Community Betterment and Main Street Program organizations, and other civic and tourism organizations that present art to their communities.

MAC allocates every program dollar based on the recommendations of Missouri citizens who serve on advisory panels that meet annually to review applications from organizations seeking grants. The panel's recommendations are based on established criteria, including artistic excellence, education and outreach, community support, administrative ability and diversity of audience served.

The Missouri Arts Council Cultural Trust Fund is an invested endowment fund created by the state legislature in 1993. Income from the Cultural Trust Fund is dedicated to supporting the arts in Missouri. The Cultural Trust Fund is projected to grow to $100 million in public funds and stimulate an additional $100 million in long-term private investment in the arts statewide. A portion of the revenue generated by Missouri's nonresident professional athletes is the funding source for the Cultural Trust Fund.

The Cultural Trust Fund serves as a valuable asset strengthening the arts in Missouri for the long term. It stimulates private fundraising for arts endowments and cultural facilities through an innovative program called the Capital Incentive Program. The Organizational Development Program is a capacity-building initiative for small and mid-sized Missouri arts organizations that enhances their ability to provide arts programs and services to their communities.

The Cultural Trust Fund is administered by a board of trustees, consisting of the state treasurer, two members of the Senate appointed by the president pro tem of the Senate, two members of the House of Representatives appointed by the speaker of the House, and the members of the Missouri Arts Council.

The Division of Workforce Development administers and provides direct services through federal and state funds granted to provide employment and training opportunities, which will increase the earned income for Missouri's economically disadvantaged, unemployed and underemployed adult and youth citizens.

The division ensures that comprehensive training occurs at the local level so that the skills of the available workforce meet the needs of businesses. The division allocates Workforce Investment Act and Welfare to Work funds to 14 Workforce Investment regions to help establish a flexible but coordinated workforce development system. Local Workforce Investment Boards and chief local elected officials within each region determine the types of programs to be offered and are responsible for the policy and oversight of the delivery of services. The division monitors, evaluates and provides technical assistance for continuous improvement with a focus toward customer-focused service.

Missouri statutes have assigned the division as staff to the governor-appointed Missouri Training and Employment Council. The council develops policy and guidance for the workforce development system of Missouri and makes recommendations to the governor as to the effectiveness of the system.

The division also plans and implements statewide employment assistance programs such as the Public Labor Exchange, Worker Re-entry, Trade Adjustment Assistance (TAA), Job Corp recruitment and training programs through the Missouri Customized Training Program and Community College New Jobs Training Program.

Missouri Career Center System

The Division of Workforce Development is one of five state-level partner agencies that work in conjunction with local partners to offer a wide variety of workforce development services according to the needs of the community. The Missouri Career Center System coordinates the delivery of services for both employers and workers through a variety of programs and agencies at 34 locations throughout Missouri, making access to these services quicker and easier for the customer.

Local and area businesses may use the career center to seek or interview potential employees, test applicants' occupational skills, gain access to labor market information or learn about financial incentives for hiring new workers. People seeking work can learn about job openings, create and send a resume, conduct a job search, sign up for training or education, or register for unemployment.

The council serves as a resource and referral center connecting women to information on all aspects of women and work, civic issues and family life. The Women's Council provides free resources for Missouri citizens, including:

- Women's Resource Guide;
- The Self Sufficiency Standard Plan for Missouri;
- Current statistics and fact sheets on issues that affect women;
- A traveling history exhibit featuring Missouri women who were recognized in their disciplines;
- A website that provides timely information on women's issues and links to various resources;
- Information on the Breast Cancer Awareness License Plate;
- Women's Council Annual Report and Policy Recommendations.

The council consists of fifteen members. The governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoints eleven members for staggered terms. The remaining four members of the council are filled by the General Assembly: two senators and two representatives are appointed by their respective bodies in the same manner as members of the standing committees. Missouri Development Finance Board

For over two decades, the Missouri Development Finance Board has provided development financing to assist infrastructure and economic development projects throughout Missouri. These projects have a high probability of success, but would not be feasible without the board's assistance.

Originally created by state statute in 1982, the board previously operated as the Missouri Industrial Development Board and the Missouri Economic Development Commission. In 1985, legislation was enacted which merged the commission into the board. In 1989, the board's name was changed to the Missouri Economic Development, Export and Infrastructure Board. Four years later, the legislature authorized the board's third and current name change.

The legislature, however, was not just making changes to the board's name, it was also progressively expanding the board's authority. These changes increased the board's ability to not only finance small businesses, but to also help fund public infrastructure improvements, cultural facilities, and larger-scale business locations and expansions.

The board has welcomed these additional responsibilities and now administers several programs to facilitate economic development and to assist in business expansion and attraction in Missouri.

Bond Financing

The Missouri Development Finance Board is authorized to issue taxable or tax-exempt private activity industrial revenue bonds for the acquisition or renovation of fixed assets owned by businesses involved in manufacturing or the production of tangible products. Currently the board is focusing primarily on redevelopment projects, particularly those that eliminate blight.

The board can issue tax-exempt cultural facility bonds to qualified charitable organizations for acquisition, construction, renovation and equipping cultural projects such as museums or recreational facilities.

The board can issue tax-exempt public purpose infrastructure bonds to local governments that have projects that serve a public purpose, such as public buildings, jails, police and fire stations, and public infrastructure.

Missouri Tax Credit for Contributions

The Tax Credit for Contributions Program is a significant fundraising tool that uses private contributions to fund public purpose projects. The board is authorized to grant state tax credits equal to 50 percent of any monies contributed to the board by a taxpayer, in which the proceeds assist in offsetting the costs of qualified projects that benefit the general public.

Downtown Revitalization Program

Through the Downtown Revitalization Program, the board is authorized to grant state tax credits equal to 50 percent of any monies contributed to the board by a taxpayer. These funds are then used for public-purpose infrastructure improvements necessary to redevelop downtown areas in communities with populations under 50,000 individuals.

Missouri Infrastructure Loan Program

Through the Missouri Infrastructure Loan Program, the board can offer long-term, low-interest loans to local political subdivisions or rural public sewer and water districts to fund infrastructure improvements.

Business Use Incentives for Large-Scale Development (BUILD)

The board is authorized to issue and monitor BUILD Missouri Revenue Bonds, which provide a tool for the Department of Economic Development and MDFB to finance a portion of the eligible costs for businesses that seek to locate or expand in Missouri. Eligible projects must meet substantial new job, capital investment and general company eligibility requirements.

City/State Partners Program

The City/State Partners Program is a joint effort between the Export Import (Ex-Im) Bank of the United States and state and local entities around the country. The program aims to provide financing services to small- and medium-sized U.S. companies that are in need of financing to start exporting their products and services.

Borrowers participating in the board's programs are responsible for debt repayment. The state of Missouri does not incur any costs, nor does it bear any obligation for retiring loans, bonds or notes.

Membership on the board is composed of nine private Missouri residents who are appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the ponent of economic development, providing one of every 14 Missouri jobs. There were 35.6 million visitors to the Show-Me State in the last fiscal year—an all-time record!

The 74th General Assembly recognized the importance of tourism 36 years ago with the creation of the Missouri Tourism Commission in 1967. In 1997, the Division of Tourism unveiled a new direction for tourism by creating a new state logo and slogan promoting Missouri's river heritage. Now in its seventh year, the division of tourism's advertising slogan, "Where the rivers run," continues as a theme in this year's television and print advertising campaigns. The new campaign focuses on the experiences that Missouri offers and tourists' perceptions of Missouri as a scenic destination with cultural, historical and family activities.

Tourism Commission

The commission consists of 10 members: the lieutenant governor; two members of the Senate of different political parties appointed by the president pro tem of the Senate; two members of the House of Representatives of different political parties appointed by the speaker of the House; and five other persons appointed by the governor, which may include, but are not limited to, persons engaged in tourist-oriented operations. No more than three of the governor's appointees shall be of the same political party.

Commission members appointed by the governor serve staggered four-year terms and may be reappointed at the end of their terms. All serve without compensation, but are reimbursed for necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties.

The commission elects a chairman and meets at least four times in a calendar year at the call of the chairman to determine all matters relating to the tourism policies of the State of Missouri and the administration of the Division of Tourism.

The commission reports to each regular session of the General Assembly the results of its marketing program and any recommendations for legislation in the field of tourism promotion.

The budget of the Division of Tourism is contained within the annual submittal of the Department of Economic Development to the Missouri General Assembly for approval.

The Tourism Commission employs a director of the Division of Tourism, qualified by education and experience in public administration with a background in the use of the various news media. The director employs a staff of professional, technical and clerical personnel.

Activities and Plans

Division activities focus on five research-based, strategically planned areas:

- Communications efforts include public and media relations, photographic services and publications;
- Cooperative marketing matches state funds with private-sector tourism dollars for destination promotion;
- Domestic marketing includes advertising, trade shows, sports, meetings/convention marketing and sports marketing, special promotions and events;
- International efforts are targeted in Canada and the United Kingdom in the areas of trade relations, public relations, product development and advertising; and,
- Special markets efforts focus on reaching niche audiences, such as African-American tourists; cultural tourists; and tour and travel, which includes group tour and group leader familiarization tours, advertising and marketplaces.

Research plays a vital role in the effectiveness of the division's efforts to increase tourism spending and stimulate economic and market-share growth at the state and local level. It not only measures past efforts, but also can give important insight to how and where, when and to whom the state should direct promotional efforts to increase its market share of visitors and expenditures. Research projects are conducted on a continual basis to determine the size, growth and impact of these marketing efforts.

Annually, the division works with research firms to assess subjects, including the effect of travel spending on the state's economy, tax revenue derived from travel spending and employment generated through tourism.

Most activities are in the area of advertising and promotion. Among the promotional tools are brochures, highlighted by the annual Missouri Vacation Planner and events calendars. These publications are distributed free to the public. News releases and a monthly online newsletter, The Tourism Monitor, also are prepared for the news media and others interested in Missouri tourism. The division has an Internet presence through its Web site, which includes destination and attraction information, as well as news and other promotional programs.

Through a paid advertising program, the division promotes Missouri's vacation opportunities. The advertising has the goal of creating a positive image of Missouri and generating travel to the state. Mailing of state information in response to requests is another major part of the division's responsibilities.

In 1993, HB 188 was signed into law as section 620.467, RSMo. This legislation included a performance-based funding formula for the Missouri Division of Tourism, which allowed for the implementation of a Cooperative Marketing Program. This is a matching-funds reimbursement program designed to increase the impact and promote the effectiveness of local advertising efforts. By partnering both creative and financial resources of local and nonprofit tourism organizations with the financial resources of the Division of Tourism, the program encourages the development of new and expanded marketing initiatives. In its first year (fiscal year 1994), the Cooperative Marketing Program processed a total of 72 applications with $1 million in state funding. The fiscal year 2002 program, with state funding allocations of $2.6 million in state funds, had an advertising impact of $5.2 million. The program encourages local and regional cooperation and partnering efforts and stresses the coordination of advertising with the division's strategic marketing plan.

Much of the division's work is designed to meet the changing trends in the travel/tourism industry. For the fifth fiscal year, the Division of Tourism will have specifically targeted Missouri's tourism message to audiences in the African-American market. The division, through its marketing partners, has expanded our marketing campaign to help grow our tourism industry in new areas. This initiative also includes encouraging close-to-home travel for the estimated 80 million Americans who live within a day's drive of Missouri. The division cooperates with tour packagers and group travel promoters to develop efficient, cost-saving travel opportunities for those who prefer pre-planned vacations.

For travelers entering Missouri, the division operates six Official State Welcome Centers. The six welcome centers are located at key entry points to the state at the following locations:

- Joplin Welcome Center—Interstate 44 west of Joplin
- St. Louis Welcome Center—Interstate 270 and Riverview Drive in St. Louis
- New Madrid Welcome Center—Interstate 55 south of New Madrid
- The Hardin C. Cox Welcome Center at Rock Port—Interstate 29 near Rock Port
- Hannibal Welcome Center—Highway 61 at Hannibal
- Kansas City Welcome Center—Interstate 70 entering Kansas City

Close relationships with others in the travel-promotion field are vital. The division maintains these relationships through memberships, including the Travel Industry Association of America, International Visit USA Committees, National Tour Association, American Bus Association and other travel associations.

The division has won awards in its campaigns to reach international markets, including Canada and the United Kingdom. Much of this effort is through regional marketing organizations, such as Mississippi River Country USA. The division has a market representative in the United Kingdom to oversee the growth of this important market. Further promotional efforts are coordinated with the Department of Economic Development's international offices.

The division works closely with Missouri communities, area promotion groups and federal agencies, including the Missouri Travel Council, Missouri Association of Convention and Visitors Bureaus, Missouri Arts Council, state and national parks, the Missouri Department of Conservation, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, National Forest Service and U.S. Department of Commerce.

Missouri Film Office

The Missouri Film Office was created in 1983 to attract film, television, video and cable productions to Missouri and promote the growth of the film and video production industry within the state. Film Office staff help save filmmakers time, effort and money in arranging a shoot in Missouri by providing assistance with scouting and pre-production requirements, as well as serving as a liaison between film industry professionals and various federal, state, and local officials; institutions; private businesses; and individuals.

The office also administers the Film Production Tax Credit. This state income tax credit can be issued by the Department of Economic Development to a film production company, equaling up to 50% of the company's expenditures in Missouri necessary for the making of a film. A nine-member Missouri Film Commission advises the department on various matters related to promoting the state as a location for filmmaking.

Regulatory Groups

Through its regulatory agencies, the Department of Economic Development works to safeguard the public interest by ensuring safe and sound financial institutions, just and reasonable utility rates and ethical services by licensed professionals. These agencies include the Division of Credit Unions, Division of Finance, Office of the Public Counsel, Missouri Public Service Commission and Division of Professional Registration.

The Omnibus State Reorganization Act of 1974 removed credit unions from the jurisdiction of the Division of Finance. On July 1, 1974, the Division of Credit Unions was created and all powers, duties and functions were transferred from the commissioner of finance to the director of the Division of Credit Unions. This agency is under the Department of Economic Development and has a director who is nominated by the department director and appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Credit Union Commission was created in 1998. The commission hears and determines any appeal from certain decisions of the director of the Division of Credit Unions, approves or disapproves regulations proposed by the director, and consults with and advises the director on matters pertaining to the organization, operation and supervision of credit unions. The bipartisan commission is comprised of seven members; four must have certain credit union experience, two must be individuals not involved in the administration of a financial institution and one must be an attorney.

The Division of Credit Unions is the regulatory agency responsible for the examination, supervision, chartering, merger and liquidation of all state-chartered credit unions. The division also responds to consumer requests or complaints in regard to credit union services or operations.

As of December 31, 2002, Missouri ranked eighth in the nation in the number of state-chartered credit unions. The Division of Credit Unions currently regulates 165 credit unions with assets exceeding $7.4 billion. There are approximately 1,167,920 members of Missouri credit unions.

State-chartered banks were under the jurisdiction of the secretary of state until 1907 when the General Assembly created the State Banking Department. Over the years, the agency was renamed the Division of Finance and is now within the Department of Economic Development. The division is headed by the commissioner of finance, who is nominated by the department director and appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The State Banking Board, a quasi-judicial body, was created in 1955 to handle appeals from certain decisions and orders of the commissioner of finance. The bipartisan board is comprised of five members; two must be nonbankers, one a lawyer and two experienced bankers. The Savings and Loan Commission, created in 1957, serves a similar function for state chartered thrift associations. This bipartisan commission is also comprised of five members, one of whom must be a lawyer.

The division is responsible for the incorporation and regulation of state-chartered banks, trust companies, savings banks and savings and loan associations. The commissioner must approve actions such as the relocation of a financial institution's offices, establishment of branches or increase in capital. The statutes provide that each state-chartered bank and trust company be examined for safety and soundness at least once each 18 calendar months. The division also licenses and examines consumer credit companies, credit services organizations and money order companies.

The Division of Finance has 27 administrative and clerical employees in the Jefferson City office and a total of 72 field examiners—58 bank examiners, nine consumer credit examiners and five trust examiners. Field offices are maintained in Kansas City, St. Louis, Columbia, Springfield and Sikeston.

The entire cost of the division's operation is reimbursed through assessments paid by state-chartered banks, trust companies, savings institutions and fees paid by licensees.

Savings and Loan Supervision

The Division of Savings and Loan Supervision, created in 1895, was merged into the Division of Finance effective July 6, 1994, in accordance with the provisions of House Bill 1165. This bill transferred to the Division of Finance the supervision of state chartered savings and loan associations as well as the licensing of mortgage brokers.

The burden of redundant assessments had by that time caused most state thrifts to convert to federal charters. In response, in 1997 the General Assembly authorized the organization of savings banks to make the state thrift charter a viable option once more. As of December 31, 2002, there were seven savings and loans with total assets of $703 million.

Meanwhile the mortgage broker law, Section 443.800 et seq., was substantially amended in 1995; and currently there are 499 active licensees. Brokers were subjected to surety bond and net worth requirements and a five member Residential Mortgage Board was established to approve regulations and hear appeals from the commissioner's decisions.

Banking in Missouri

Missouri ranks fifth in the nation in the number of state-chartered commercial banks. As of December 31, 2002, the Division of Finance (pursuant to Chapters 361 and 362, RSMo) supervised 313 state-chartered banks and trust companies with combined total assets of $46.6 billion. During 2001 and 2002, the division approved charters for three new banks, one trust company, and converted one national bank to a state-chartered bank. The number of state-chartered banks decreased by 18 during the period as a result of one conversion to a national charter, three mergers into national banks, nine mergers into other state banks, four mergers into out of state banks and one non-deposit trust company dissolved. The deposits in all state-chartered banks and trust companies are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Branching and Interstate Banking

For most of this century, Missouri was a unit banking state and branching developed gradually as laws were changed over the last 30 years. Interstate barriers have also fallen and since June 1, 1997, banks in Missouri have been able to merge with banks in other states. The Division of Finance has entered into arrangements with other regulators to examine banks with interstate branches.

Consumer Credit

The consumer credit section supervises institutions licensed pursuant to state law (Chapters 364, 365, 367 and 408, RSMo) engage in consumer lending, retail credit financing of motor vehicles and other goods and the financing of insurance premiums. The statutes give the com-

This unit also enforces the Sale of Checks Law (Sections 361.700 et seq.), which provides for the licensing of companies which issue money orders and financial services organizations (credit repair companies) per Sections 407.635–644.

The consumer credit section handles consumer complaints in the areas of usury, refunding, credit insurance, billing disputes and collection harassment. This section also coordinates enforcement of the Missouri residential real estate anti-discrimination (redlining) laws.

The Office of the Public Counsel is Missouri's consumer advocate in the area of utility regulation. The Public Counsel must be an attorney licensed to practice in Missouri and is appointed by the director of the Department of Economic Development.

The Office of the Public Counsel was established in 1974 as an independent agency to represent the interests of utility customers in proceedings before and appeals from the Missouri Public Service Commission (PSC) and the courts. The PSC regulates the rates and services of investor-owned electric, natural gas, telephone, water, sewer and steam heat utilities, and also regulates manufactured housing. The Public Counsel's participation in PSC cases and its power to appeal PSC decisions has resulted in important victories for utility consumers.

While keeping abreast of the rapid changes that are currently occurring in the utility sector, the Office of the Public Counsel advocates for high quality utility services at affordable rates. Since many large industrial and commercial utility customers retain counsel to represent their particular interests before the PSC, the Office of the Public Counsel emphasizes residential and small business customers who otherwise would not have their point of view presented or their interests protected. Public Counsel's representation gives these consumers an essential voice in the regulation of life sustaining public utility services.

Dramatic changes in federal and state policy have introduced some competition into the local telephone market, and may significantly impact Missouri's electric industry. The Office of the Public Counsel advocates for such changes only when it appears that consumers would benefit. If such changes occur, the office of the Public Counsel will continue its traditional role in the remaining monopoly utility markets, but the office will also focus its efforts on the emerging competitive areas to advocate regulatory structures that would facilitate a transition to truly effective competition. Public Counsel educates and communicates with consumers about their rights and responsibilities. These efforts are especially important to guard against consumer fraud.

The office is staffed by attorneys, technical experts and an administrative staff. The attorneys represent the public interest in proceedings before the PSC, the state and federal courts, as well as before the Federal Communications Commission and Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Accountants, economists, financial analysts and engineers are the backbone of the technical staff. These experts offer the Public Counsel's testimony on the reasonableness, feasibility and affordability of utility proposals and practices.

The Public Counsel attempts to focus on the most significant cases for utility consumers and cases which have broad public policy effects.

The office also consults and works with other public utility consumer advocates in the other states to keep current on issues vital to the consumer and to address national and regional issues of interest to Missouri consumers.

The Missouri Public Service Commission is charged with the statutory responsibility of ensuring that public utility consumers receive safe and adequate services at just and reasonable rates that will provide the utility companies' shareholders the opportunity to earn a reasonable return on their investment.

The commission regulates utility rates, service and safety for investor-owned electric, gas, telecommunications, sewer and water companies. The commission also monitors the construction of manufactured homes to ensure compliance with state and federal law. Although the rates charged by rural electric cooperatives and municipally owned electric utilities are determined by their respective governing bodies, the commission has limited jurisdiction over rural electric cooperatives and municipally operated natural gas systems on matters of safety. The commission does not have jurisdiction over the basic service rates for telephone cooperatives, but regulates other aspects of their operations.

The commission consists of five commissioners who are appointed by the governor to six-year terms with the advice and consent of the Missouri Senate. The terms are staggered so that no more than two terms expire in any one year. The governor designates one member as chair who serves in that capacity at the pleasure of the governor.

The commission has a staff of professional accountants, engineers, economists, attorneys, financial analysts and management specialists that evaluate requests for commission approval. The staff will provide the results of its evaluation and recommend actions that satisfy the agency's statutory requirements. Staff will initiate or implement actions to enforce the commission's statutory obligations, when necessary.

Traditional rate cases have the most immediate impact on public utilities and the customers they serve. Rate cases are usually complex and can draw much public attention. The commission is also engaged in a variety of activities reflecting changes in state and federal law regarding the telecommunications and energy sectors of the utility industry.

As federal regulators make decisions that directly affect Missouri ratepayers, the commission has increased its activities before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) and the Federal Communications Commission (FCC).

Commissioners and staff members have testified on numerous occasions before these agencies.

The traditional rate case is the process through which the commission ultimately determines what customers will pay for their utility services. The process is commenced in one of two ways: a utility company files a tariff for authority to change its rates; or a complaint is filed by the commission, the PSC staff, the Office of Public Counsel or others challenging the reasonableness of the utility's rates. Generally, a tariff filing seeks a rate increase while a complaint seeks a rate reduction.

The general public is formally represented before the commission by the Office of the Public Counsel, which is a separate state agency under the Department of Economic Development.

Under both the tariff method and the complaint case method, the commission will conduct hearings for the purpose of addressing the reasonableness of the proposed tariff or the reasonableness of the rates being challenged. In most tariff filing cases, by law, the commission has up to 11 months from the time a tariff is filed to reach its decision, or the rates will go into effect as filed. Most of these cases are resolved in accord with a settlement between the parties and processed in a shorter timeframe.

The commission staff conducts an independent, on-site investigation of the company's books and records to provide the commission with a recommendation as to what increase or decrease, if any, should be ordered. This investigation can take from two weeks to several months and results in the pre-filing of written testimony. Other parties such as the Office of the Public Counsel, consumer groups, commercial and industrial interests and municipalities are given an opportunity to pre-file written testimony.

Once the participants in a case have filed their testimony, the parties meet in a prehearing conference to determine which issues will be contested at the hearing. This procedure may help parties reach agreements, which settle all or some issues in the case. This frequently results in cases being concluded sooner than the 11-month time period provided by law. The commission must approve any proposed settlement to ensure that the agreement is a reasonable resolution of the case and in the public interest.

Prior to holding formal evidentiary hearings, the commission may hold local public hearings, which allow customers to express their views on the proposed increase or the utility's service.

At the formal evidentiary hearing, parties may cross-examine other parties' witnesses in a courtroom-like setting. Once the hearing is completed, the commission reviews the evidence submitted, deliberates and then issues a decision. That decision is subject to appeal to the courts by any party except the PSC staff.

Regular meetings of the commission are held in the commission's agenda room starting at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. As with other state agencies, commission meetings are subject to the state's open meetings law.

The Data Center keeps a record of all filings and proceedings of the commission. These records are available for public inspection from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, except legal holidays. Many of these records are also available electronically at www.psc.mo.gov.

A consumer who has questions about specific matters relating to utility service should first call the utility company. If the consumer is not satisfied with the company response, he or she may call the commission's consumer services department. Consumers may also file formal written complaints. While the commission's main consumer services office is located in Jefferson City, there also is a consumer services branch office located in the St. Louis area. The commission's toll-free hotline number for complaints is 1-800-392-4211.

Under the commission's procedure, each informal complaint is assigned a specialist who acts as an intermediary between the consumer and the utility in an attempt to resolve the complaint. Through investigations of consumer complaints, the consumer services department works to ensure that utilities comply with their approved tariffs and commission regulations.

The Missouri Public Service Commission was established in 1913 by the 47th General Assembly. The 1974 State Reorganization Act placed the commission within the Department of Consumer Affairs, Regulation and Licensing. In 1984 the department name was changed to the Department of Economic Development.

The Missouri accountancy law protects the interests of the citizens of Missouri through the examination, licensure and regulation of individuals, limited liability companies, partnerships and professional corporations engaged in the practice of public accounting; assures the users of financial and economic data of an independent, objective and uniform product based upon generally accepted accounting principles and auditing standards; and ensures that the services are provided by competent and ethical practitioners. Only individuals, partnerships, limited liability companies and professional corporations qualified and registered as prescribed in Chapter 326, RSMo, may practice public accounting in the state.

The Missouri State Board of Accountancy was created in 1909 and consists of six certified public accountants and one public member appointed by the governor with the consent of the Senate for terms of five years. The board is self-sustaining by means of fees derived from the issuance of new licenses, the renewal of licenses, student registrations and other fees paid by approximately 5,500 licensees.

Board meetings are held regularly six times annually in conjunction with the examination for licensure as a barber or instructor. Officers of the board are elected annually by its members. The board is also a participating member of the National Association of Barber Boards of America.

The State Board of Chiropractic Examiners, created in 1927, consists of six members submitted by the Director of the Division of Professional Registration and appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. The members, five licensed chiropractic physicians and one public member, serve terms of four years.

It is the duty of the board to administer and enforce the chiropractic practice act and issue licenses to persons entitled to practice chiropractic under the provisions of the law. Board meetings are usually held four times annually.

The board is funded by fees derived from new and renewed licenses. There are over 1,800 chiropractic physicians currently licensed by the Board.

To qualify for license renewal, chiropractic physicians must earn 24 hours of board-approved continuing education, four hours of which must be in x-ray, four hours in differential or physical diagnosis and four hours in emergency procedures, boundary training, training in HIV or other infectious diseases.

The board certifies qualified chiropractic physicians to perform meridian therapy, acupuncture or acupressure (MTAA). To retain the certification, the chiropractic physician must earn 12 hours of annual continuing education in MTAA approved by the board.

The board also certifies qualified chiropractic physicians as insurance consultants. To retain the certification, the chiropractic physician must earn 12 hours of annual continuing education in insurance claims review.

The board is a member of the Federation of Chiropractic Licensing Boards (FCLB), District II of the FCLB and the Clearinghouse on Licensure, Enforcement and Regulation (CLEAR).

The State Board of Cosmetology was established in 1945 to examine, license and register qualified persons engaged in the practice of hairdressing, cosmetology and manicuring and, effective August 1995, esthetics. The board also licenses cosmetology schools and shops and inspects them for compliance with sanitary regulations.

The board is composed of seven members, including one public member. All members, except the public member, shall be registered cosmetologists actively engaged in the lawful practice of cosmetology, hairdressing, esthetics and manicuring, one of which must be a school owner, for at least five years.

All members are nominated by the director of the Department of Economic Development and appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate for four-year terms.

The board meets regularly six times each year as well as any special meetings that are deemed necessary. Officers are elected annually at the January board meeting.

The board is self-sustaining. It generates the necessary funds through the collection of fees for the issuance of new licenses, renewal of licenses and other fees paid by the 70,000 licensees. The board is a member of the National Interstate Council of State Boards of Cosmetology and participates in its national testing program.

hygiene member appointed for five-year terms. Members are nominated by the director of the Department of Economic Development and appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. The board is self-sustaining through annual license and other fees paid by dentists, specialists and dental hygienists.

One of the primary functions of the board is examination for competency of candidates who wish to become licensed as dentists, dental specialists or dental hygienists. The Missouri Dental Board is a participating member of the Central Region Dental Testing Service (CRDTS). CRDTS gives a clinical examination which is accepted by each member state. Applicants for original licensure who wish to practice in Missouri must pass the CRDTS regional examination or a state or regional entry-level competency examination as well as apply to the Missouri Dental Board. The board also issues licenses by credential verification to qualified applicants who have been licensed in another jurisdiction.

The board is responsible for the enforcement of Chapter 332, RSMo; responds to consumer complaints; and investigates and brings formal complaints against licensees who violate the dental law or rules and regulations of the board. The board also brings actions against persons practicing dentistry or dental hygiene without a license and may promulgate rules and regulations necessary to enforce Chapter 332, RSMo.

The 91st General Assembly created the Advisory Commission for Dental Hygienists. Members of this commission, appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate, are responsible for advising the board on the licensure and regulation of dental hygienists.

The State Board of Pharmacy was established by the General Assembly in 1909. The board consists of seven members, six of whom must be licensed pharmacists in good standing and actively engaged in the practice of pharmacy within the state and one public member. Appointments are for five years.

The pharmacy law has been amended at various times to meet the needs and requirements of the profession. During the 66th General Assembly, a drug store or pharmacy law was enacted granting the board power to license all drug stores, pharmacies, apothecary shops and chemist shops in the state. Seven inspectors assist in enforcing the law with their salaries and travel expenses set by the board.

Organization of the board is held annually with the election of a president and vice president, both of whom must be board members.

The board annually issues 7,100 renewals to registered pharmacists and permits to some 1,600 pharmacies in the state. In addition, the board annually issues 75 renewals to non-resident pharmacies as well as 1,100 renewals to drug distributors.

The board also licenses intern pharmacists and renews approximately 700 intern pharmacist licenses annually. The board issues temporary licenses to pharmacists who are licensed in another state and who are completing a residency program in Missouri. This type of license restricts the pharmacist to specific sites approved by the board.

The initial registration of approximately 7,000 pharmacy technicians occurred in 1999. The board annually issues 11,000 renewals to pharmacy technicians.

The Missouri State Board of Podiatry was created in 1945 by an act of the General Assembly. The board is composed of five members, including one voting public member. Members are nominated by the director of the Department of Economic Development and appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate for four-year terms.

The board administers and enforces the Podiatry Act, conducts examination of applicants and grants certificates of registration to persons who comply with the provisions of the law.

In 1993, legislation was passed requiring all newly licensed podiatrists to complete a twelve-month residency program.

In 1995, after meeting additional requirements, a podiatrist may perform surgery of the ankle. That legislation also changed the name of the board to the State Board of Podiatric Medicine.

After January 1, 2005, all podiatrists who desire to perform ankle surgery will have to meet additional residency and CME requirements.

The board is funded through fees derived from new and renewed licenses. Renewal fees are due biennially by March 1. To qualify for renewal, licensees must earn at least 12 hours of approved continuing education credit in a continuing education course.

The board is appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate for terms of four years. No more than three members of the board may belong to the same political party.

The board appoints a Veterinary Technician Examining Committee, consisting of two veterinarians, two veterinary technicians and the executive director, to administer the examinations for registration in veterinary technology.

The board is a member of the American Association of Veterinary State Boards.

The board is entirely self-sustaining by means of fees derived from issuance of new licenses, registrations and facility permits and the annual renewal of those licenses and permits.

State Board of Education

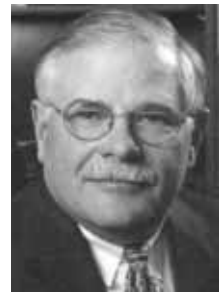

Under the Missouri Constitution (Article IX), the State Board of Education has general authority for "supervision of instruction in the public schools." Today, this responsibility includes the oversight of educational programs and services that serve Missourians from preschool through the adult levels.

The State Board of Education is composed of eight lay citizens, appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate to serve eight-year terms. The terms are staggered so that one term expires each year. No more than four members may belong to the same political party. No more than one member of the board may live in the same county or congressional district.

The board appoints the commissioner of education to serve as its chief executive officer and as director of the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education. The board is required by law to meet at least twice a year in Jefferson City. Generally, though, the board meets for two days each month.

The primary role of the board is to provide leadership and advocacy for the improvement of Missouri's public education system. The board also establishes policies and regulations needed to carry out state and federal laws related to public education. The board's major duties include:

• Setting accreditation standards for local school districts through the Missouri School Improvement Program (MSIP). The accreditation standards define basic requirements for curriculum, student performance, staffing, high school graduation, and other areas of school operations.

• Establishing "academic performance standards" for the public schools and designing an assessment system to measure students' learning, as required by the Outstanding Schools Act of 1993. In response to that law, the state developed the "Missouri Assessment Program" (MAP), a performance-based testing system that is used annually in all school districts.

• Setting education and certification requirements for all professional personnel (teachers, administrators, librarians, counselors, etc.) in public schools.

• Approving educator-preparation programs in the state's community colleges and four-year institutions, both public and private.

• Establishing regulations and administrative requirements for the distribution of state and federal funds to school districts and other agencies.

• Monitoring school districts' compliance with state and federal laws and regulations. This includes the administration of federally supported programs in the areas of special education, vocational-technical education and child nutrition (the school lunch and breakfast programs).

• Administering the Missouri School for the Blind (St. Louis), the Missouri School for the Deaf (Fulton) and the system of State Schools for Severely Handicapped.

• Administering vocational rehabilitation services for adult citizens with disabilities. (See Division of Vocational Rehabilitation.)

Department of Elementary and Secondary Education

Article IX of the Missouri Constitution reads, in part: "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the general assembly shall establish and maintain free public schools for the gratuitous instruction of all persons in this state within ages not in excess of twenty-one years as prescribed by law."

To help carry out this mandate the legislature first established a state office of education, with an elected state superintendent, in 1839. The office went through several transformations until the current constitution, adopted in 1945, established the State Board of Education in its present form and created a department of education, headed by an appointed commissioner of education.

The Department of Elementary and Secondary Education (DESE) was reorganized and established in its present form by the Omnibus State Reorganization Act of 1974.

The department is primarily a service agency that works with educators, legislators, government agencies, community leaders and citizens to maintain a strong public education system. Through its statewide school-improvement initiatives and its regulatory functions, the department strives to assure that all citizens have access to high-quality public education.

The Department of Elementary and Secondary Education is the administrative arm of the State Board of Education. In addition to the Commissioner of Education, the senior staff of the department consists of one deputy commissioner, one associate commissioner and five assistant commissioners. The associate and assistant commissioners each head one of the department's six main divisions.

department is functionally organized into seven divisions: Administration; Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion; Environmental Health and Communicable Disease Prevention; Health Standards and Licensure; Maternal, Child and Family Health; Nutritional Health and Services; and Senior Services.

The director is the chief liaison officer of the Department of Health and Senior Services for joint efforts with other governmental agencies and with private organizations that conduct or sponsor programs that relate to health and senior services in Missouri. The director is assisted by a Chief Operating Officer and two Deputy Directors responsible for the management of the department and administration of its programs and services.

The director's office also oversees the Center for Local Public Health Services, Center for Health Information Management and Evaluation, Center for Health Improvement and the Center for Emergency Response and Terrorism, the offices of public information; minority health; personnel; training and professional development; governmental policy and legislation; women's health, general counsel, epidemiology, as well as district and regional offices.

The Office of Minority Health and Senior Services was established by statute to monitor the programs in the department for their impact on eliminating disparities that exist among black, Hispanic, Native and Asian Americans. The office also works collaboratively with community based organizations and leaders to identify specialized needs of minority populations and older individuals.

The Office of Epidemiology provides epidemiological consultation to all divisions, centers and offices to develop and implement research projects that assist in needs assessment, policy development, planning and implementation of programs. The office also provides consultation to local agencies in response to threats to their population and participates in training courses and presentations regarding various aspects of epidemiology. The office publishes prevention research in peer-reviewed journals and departmental publications.

The Missouri Board of Nursing Home Administrators was established in 1970. The board is responsible for adopting, amending and repealing rules necessary to carry out the provisions of Chapter 344, RSMo; establishing minimum standards for licensing nursing home administrators; providing testing opportunities for qualified applicants; approving and monitoring continuing education programs designed for nursing home administrators; auditing license renewal applications and renewing the licenses of qualified licensees; and conducting hearings affording due process of law, upon charges calling for discipline of a licensee.

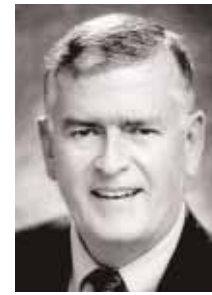

The board, appointed by the director of the department, consists of 10 members who serve three-year staggered terms. Membership of the board consists of one licensed physician, two licensed health professionals, one person from the field of health care education, four people who have been in general administrative charge of a licensed nursing home for at least five years immediately preceding their appointment and two public members.

The Center for Emergency Response and Terrorism is responsible for coordinating regional and state planning for public health emergencies and disasters, including biological, chemical and nuclear terrorism. Through partnerships with hospitals and other health care organizations, local entities including government and law enforcement agencies, and other partners, the center works to assure systems are in place to protect the health of Missourians during a public health emergency.

The Department Situation Room (DSR) serves as the coordination point for all Department of Health and Senior Services' responses to emergencies, both natural and deliberate. It operates at a non-threat level 24 hours a day, 7 days a week and can be staffed and function as a command and control center in the event of an emergency. The DSR monitors the day-to-day emergency preparedness of the public health system and allied systems. The DSR also serves as part of the Health Alert Network to rapidly receive and disperse communications among public health and healthcare partners at the local, regional, state and federal levels, and assign and track follow-up activities. The DSR hotline is the contact point for the general pub-

Missouri is taking steps at the state and local level to increase preparedness for and response to bioterrorism, outbreaks of infectious disease, and public health threats and emergencies. These efforts focus on: assessment and planning; education and training; disease reporting; hospital and laboratory surveillance; laboratory capacity; communications technology; public information and media relations; and Geographic Information Systems or GIS.

Local public health agencies and regional response planners are working to develop integrated emergency regional response/terrorism plans that will coordinate with the state's emergency response plan. The center is working closely with hospitals to assess their needs and complete preparedness planning on the regional level.

The Center for Health Information Management and Evaluation oversees the statistical and information systems activities of the Department of Health and Senior Services. Based on the analysis of statistics, this center advises the director regarding the general status of Missourians. Other statistical responsibilities include monitoring the supply of selected professionals in the state and monitoring the supply, staffing and utilization of hospitals and other facilities.

The Bureau of Vital Records serves as the state archives for vital records. All births and deaths in Missouri are registered with the bureau that, in turn, issues copies of birth and death certificates to eligible persons. In 2002, the bureau issued nearly 90,000 copies of vital records on file. Other records on file are for marriages and marriage dissolutions in Missouri. Approximately 222,000 records of births, deaths, fetal deaths, marriages, divorces, and abortions were filed with the Bureau of Vital Records in 2002. Missouri's files for resident births and deaths date from 1910 and the files for marriage dissolutions date from 1948.

Statistical services of the Department of Health and Senior Services are assigned to the Section of Health Statistics. The units of this section collect, analyze and distribute information which promotes better understanding of problems and needs in Missouri, as well as spotlighting progress achieved in the general health status of Missourians. Data generated by the section aid and guide the planning, development and evaluation of programs and services of the department as well as the related activities of other agencies, institutions and organizations.

While the data collected by the section are primarily valuable to help solve Missouri problems, much of the activity is coordinated with the National Center for Health Statistics. This allows comparable data to be collected at the state level that can be added with data from other states to form a picture of the health status of the nation.

GARLAND LAND, M.P.H.
Director, Center for Health Information Management and Evaluation

The Bureau of Health Data Analysis analyzes and reports data related to births, deaths, marriages, marriage dissolutions, abortions, and other health statistics. These vital statistics are published in a monthly news bulletin, and annual report and periodic special reports. The bureau also prepares annual population estimates. Births and death data and special surveys are used to evaluate the effectiveness of maternal and child health programs in Missouri.

The Bureau of Health Resources Statistics develops statistics regarding Missouri resources in the areas of health manpower and health facilities. These statistics are compiled from the information received on annual surveys to the individual practitioners and facilities.

Effective January 1, 1993, hospitals are required to report financial data. These data are used to prepare consumer reports on charges and quality of care. This bureau also coordinates the development and publication of data on the department's web site.

This bureau manages the department's website and the development of the Missouri Information for Community Assessment (MICA) system.

The Bureau of Health Services Statistics supports the Office of Injury Control by analyzing data related to injuries in Missouri. These data sets include ambulance trip ticket data, Head and Spinal Cord Injury Registry data, mortality data, hospital inpatient and outpatient data, motor vehicle crash data and data related to the sexual abuse of children. The bureau also assists other bureaus in designing, conducting and analyzing surveys.

The Bureau of Health Care Performance Monitoring collects and analyzes patient abstract data filed by hospitals and ambulatory surgical centers. The bureau also publishes two types of consumer's guides. The Outpatient Procedures Guide reports facility charges associated with selected outpatient procedures. The Managed Care Consumer's Guides contain information obtained from commercial, Medicare, and MC+ managed care plans on the quality of care and access to care of Missouri's HMO and POS products and their members' reports of satisfaction.

Office of Information Systems supports the mission of the department by supplying the information services and technology infrastructure required to address public needs of the department and Missouri citizens. This is provided through applications development and maintenance, wide area and local area network administration, server administration, help desk services, client installations, and training.

The Center for Health Improvement has as its mission to enable communities to enhance the quality of life and health of their residents by building local capacity to develop, implement, and maintain effective community health initiatives, programs, and systems around primary, preventive and oral health. The capacities communities require include those to assess needs; identify resources; plan, implement, and evaluate interventions; develop community standards; and promote collaborative agreements. Through training, technical assistance and financial resources, the center is able to help communities build those capacities. The center also provides additional training, technical assistance and financial resources to communities with identified capacity to develop, coordinate and integrate community-based health care delivery systems, especially in those rural and underserved communities in the state.

The Rural Health and Primary Care program assists communities, health facilities and individuals in their efforts to develop and improve access to essential health care services. The unit serves as a liaison with the federal government in the administration of the Public Health Service, community health center, rural and urban health initiatives, critical access hospitals and the health professional incentive programs. The unit develops needs assessments to determine health professional shortage areas and assists in site development, recruitment and placement of National Health Service Corps supported health professionals in those areas. The unit administers the Primary Care Resource Initiative for Missouri (PRIMO), which is designed to improve access to primary, dental and mental health care services through a continuum of investments in communities, organizations and individual health care professionals. The unit administers the health professional incentive programs for students and resident physicians pursuing careers in primary care medicine, primary care advanced practice nursing, dentistry, dental hygiene and all levels of nursing. Additional incentives are available for health professionals with educational debt through the state's loan repayment program.

CONNIE MIHALEVICH
Director
Center for Health Improvement

The Oral Health Program carries out a broad range of core public health activities including, but not limited to, oral health surveillance, assuring access to care, oral health education, fluorides, promotion of dental sealants, community water fluoridation, and serving as a resource on oral health issues for state and federal agencies, the dental profession, and the public. The oral health surveillance includes data on untreated dental decay and the percent of children with one or more dental sealants in the second, third, and sixth grades. A statewide survey is conducted every five years. The result of this survey is available at www.dhss.state.mo.us. Oral Health Program works with the Primary Care Office and the Missouri Primary Care Association, to increase access to dental care through Community Health Centers. OHP also works to assure primary oral health services for children with special health care needs and the mentally retarded and developmentally delayed children through a cooperative agreement with the Elks Benevolent Trust, and the Department of Hospital Dentistry at Truman Medical Center East, utilizing mobile dental vans that cover the state. Community water fluoridation is a statewide initiative reaching 80% of the state's population through 156 community water systems. OHP provides consultation of the equipment needed for new installations, and provides technical assistance as needed. The Fluoride Mouthrinse program is made available to participating schools across the state at no cost to the student. This program is strongly promoted in areas of the state where the community water system is not fluoridated or a large percentage of the population is on private wells. Placement of dental sealants for students in the second, third, and sixth grades is an intervention to prevent dental decay. OHP provides technical assistance and consultation to local entities to increase the number of students receiving these dental sealants. Oral Health Program works with professional associations and other state agencies. These include: Missouri Dental Association, Missouri Dental Hygienist Association, Missouri Coalition for Oral Health Access, Missouri Department of Elementary and Secondary Education, Missouri Department of Social Services, and Missouri Local Public Health Agencies.

The Community Health Assistance Resource Team (CHART), developed in 1994, is a framework for community health improvement that provides technical assistance and workshops for communities striving to build skills in areas such as: assess health status of community; determine local priorities and needs; identify local resources and intervention models; develop community-based plans, and sustain initiatives leading to improved health outcomes. Workshop topics include coalition building, community health assessment, data analysis, prioritization, grant writing basics, creating a funding team, and outcome measurement. The statewide CHART process is built upon four tenets—community involvement, commitment, control and accountability—and facilitates improved health through increased empowerment and identification of community resources. CHART staff members, including district community support consultants, collaborate with other DHSS units, other state agencies, local public health agencies, and community individuals and groups to improve the health of Missourians. Through the assessment of local need, garnering of local and other resources and the design and development of specific, sustainable interventions, communities are active participants in the health improvement process.

The Caring Communities initiative is designed to challenge state agencies to reexamine the way they do business and challenges communities to organize their structures to accept sustained responsibility for the well being of children and families. State agencies and local communities collaborate to design strategies to improve the well being of children and families. Communities use state and local resources to implement the strategies. Six core results guide the state agencies and the communities as they strive to achieve better results for children and families. There are currently twenty-one Community Partnerships and eight state agencies, the departments of Health and Senior Services, Mental Health, Social Services, Elementary & Secondary Education, Labor & Industrial Relations, Economic Development, Corrections and Public Safety, involved in Caring Communities.

The State Public Health Laboratory building houses the department's laboratory. Each year, over a half million samples are received by the central laboratory, at branch laboratories in Springfield and Poplar Bluff, and at the State Tuberculosis Laboratory in Mt. Vernon. The laboratory provides testing services in the fields of chemistry, environmental bacteriology, microbiology, serology and virology. The laboratory also approves breath alcohol testing equipment used in Missouri; issues permits to persons qualified to supervise and operate these devices and periodically inspects breath testing instruments used in the state.

In addition to programs of the department, the laboratory performs tests in support of activities of the state departments of Corrections, Mental Health, Natural Resources, Agriculture and law enforcement agencies.

The chemistry unit conducts chemical analyses of water and other environmental samples to determine the presence of toxic chemicals or substances.

The environmental bacteriology unit tests public and private water supplies for the presence of coliform bacteria, and milk for the bacterial counts and food suspected of causing disease outbreaks (food poisoning).

The metabolic disease unit examines blood samples from newborn babies to find those who need treatment for metabolic diseases such as phenylketonuria (PKU), hypothyroidism, galactosemia and sickle cell disease.

The microbiology unit examines blood, feces and food samples for the presence of the causative agent for typhoid fever and for organisms which cause other intestinal diseases. It prepares throat cultures for the detection of pertussis (whooping cough); identifies blood, intestinal and tissue parasites; and conducts testing for gonorrhea and chlamydia.

The serology unit performs tests to help diagnose syphilis and AIDS; performs blood tests for measles, rubella and hepatitis.

The virology unit examines clinical specimens to detect influenza and West Nile virus, and examines animals for rabies.

The State Tuberculosis Laboratory conducts diagnostic tests on clinical specimens for the presence of the causative agent of tuberculosis in support of the state's TB prevention program. It also serves as a reference center for the state and region for identifying other mycobacterial infections.

Working in conjunction with the scientific units of the laboratory are two support units - administrative services and central services. The administrative services unit compiles statistical work loads, records and mails laboratory reports and collects fees paid for laboratory services. The central services unit prepares glassware, culture media and reagents for use in the various scientific units.

The Division of Administration assists and supports the department's programs in the accomplishment of their goals by providing administrative and technical services. Business support services include budget administration, grants and contract administration, accounting and procurement, general office services and internal auditing.

The Center for Local Public Health Services strengthens the public health system by supporting the continued development of a population-based approach to health issues in Missouri communities. The center promotes a strong local public health system by defining and supporting the implementation of core public health functions throughout the state. The center facilitates development of professional standards and continuous learning opportunities for the local public health workforce. It provides leadership and technical assistance to local public health agencies and their community partners to improve their services through strategic planning, continuous quality improvement and other initiatives. The center works closely with multiple partners and stakeholders to develop and communicate a common vision and direction for public health in Missouri. The center works with policymakers and the public to improve understanding of the importance of public health and the responsibility of government to assure that a strong public health system is in place.

The Division of Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion provides leadership and coordination in efforts to combat the major causes of illness, disability and premature death in Missouri such as heart disease, cancer, stroke, diabetes, osteoporosis and arthritis. This division includes three bureaus: Chronic Disease Control, Cancer Control, and Health Promotion. In addition, the Office of Surveillance, Research and Evaluation provides support to all programs within the division and the department.

The Bureau of Chronic Disease Control administers programs targeting Missourians at high risk for chronic disease, disability and premature death. Minorities and the economically disadvantaged have been identified as groups at high risk for cardiovascular disease, diabetes, arthritis, osteoporosis, kidney disease, and pulmonary diseases. Major disparities exist in the health status, and disease and death rates experienced by minorities and low socioeconomic groups when compared with all other Missourians.

Primary and secondary prevention programs are conducted to prevent or detect chronic diseases, including asthma, cardiovascular disease, stroke, diabetes, arthritis, osteoporosis and lupus. Educational programs promote healthy lifestyles among youth and adults. Urban and rural follow-up programs monitor persons identified as high risk. Professional education programs provide current and accurate scientific information to health care providers and promote coordination of health services to meet the special needs of high-risk populations.

The Missouri Arthritis and Osteoporosis Program promotes optimal health and quality of life for all Missourians affected by arthritis, rheumatic disease, and musculoskeletal conditions. There are more than 100 different diseases and syndromes under the "arthritis" umbrella including juvenile arthritis, rheumatoid arthritis, osteoporosis, lupus, fibromyalgia, gout, carpal tunnel, etc. The program's focus is on prevention, early intervention, education, service, and collaboration. The program collaborates with a variety of local, state and federal partners to address and support key issues related to arthritis and osteoporosis–planning, developing, and implementing statewide education and outreach activities. The program supports a network of seven Regional Arthritis Centers.

The Missouri Heart Disease and Stroke Program focuses on primary and secondary prevention of the risk factors for cardiovascular disease and diabetes. Interventions include community, worksite, school, and health care policy and environmental change programs to improve physical activity and heart healthy eating. It partners with a variety of state, local and national organizations to implement these programs and provide training and resources to health professionals at all levels to form the Cardiovascular Disease Collaborative.

The Missouri Diabetes Prevention and Control Program provides and promotes programs, policies and education to health professionals and community-based organizations in order to reduce the impact of diabetes. This is accomplished through partnerships with a variety of state, local, and national organizations to implement quality improvement, awareness and educational programs and provide training and resources to health professionals at all levels.

The Missouri Asthma Prevention and Control Program works to improve the capacity of Missouri's public health system to define and reduce the burden of asthma through effective linkages and comprehensive surveillance and evaluation. Another purpose of the program is to raise asthma awareness within schools, worksites, communities, and health care providers statewide. The program's advisory board plays a key role in areas including the development of a statewide focus on asthma surveillance, prevention and control; providing advice regarding asthma-related issues; assisting in the development of a state plan and serves as an outside partner to gain support for the program and its services.

The Bureau of Cancer Control coordinates department activities to reduce cancer morbidity and mortality throughout Missouri. Bureau staff maintain information on cancer control resources and information available in Missouri and nationwide. Staff promote primary cancer control education and awareness, and the bureau funds comprehensive cancer control activities through eight regional cancer control coalitions. Staff also work with the Missouri Cancer Consortium in the development of a statewide comprehensive cancer control plan.

Through a grant from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Missouri Breast and Cervical Cancer Control Program issues participation agreements with over 90 providers statewide to provide breast and cervical cancer screenings and some diagnostic tests to older women at higher risk for these conditions who qualify by age and income guidelines for the program. Staff are also responsible for breast and cervical cancer professional and public education, coalition support, quality assurance, and surveillance.

In addition, the bureau manages the Missouri Organ Donor Program created by state legislation in 1996. The statute mandates a statewide, confidential registry of potential organ and tissue donors, a statewide donation awareness program for education of the general public, and secondary school organ and tissue donation programs.

The Bureau of Health Promotion coordinates health promotion and education programs and approaches designed to increase healthy lifelong practices to reduce the risk of chronic diseases among Missourians. Bureau programs focus on efforts to increase policy and environmental approaches to reduce three primary risk factors for chronic diseases–tobacco use, inadequate physical activity and unhealthy eating.

The Missouri Tobacco Use Prevention managed by the bureau supports local programs and community coalitions to implement evidence-based strategies to reduce tobacco use among young people, increase quitting among tobacco users, and decrease nonsmokers exposure to secondhand smoke. Program staff coordinates training and technical support for local programs, and prepares and disseminates information and materials to assist with community education. Coalitions conduct community education about the dangers of tobacco use and secondhand smoke, and work to increase the number of public places that prohibit smoking. Materials may be obtained on the program website at www.dhss.state.mo.us/SmokingAndTobacco.

The bureau also manages contracts with selected local public health agencies throughout the state to implement programs for primary prevention of chronic diseases. These local public health agencies plan and facilitate efforts to increase physical activity and healthy eating through community-wide campaigns, school-based programs, and environmental approaches such as increasing access to safe places to be physically active. These agencies also provide leadership and support for local coalitions working to decrease initiation of tobacco use among young people, and exposure to secondhand smoke among nonsmokers.

The bureau serves as the primary contact for the department to coordinate physical activity program planning and technical support for community programs. The bureau oversees the department's Worksite Health Promotion Program that sponsors on-site exercise classes, educational seminars and an annual employee physical activity challenge, MOve For Your Health. Program materials are available for any individual wanting to plan a personal physical activity program, or for organizations and agencies to offer a physical activity challenge for employees or the community. The MOve For Your Health Journal and Coordinator Guide may be obtained from the bureau by calling 1-866-726-9926 (toll-free).

The Office of Surveillance, Research and Evaluation conducts ongoing surveillance of risk factors for chronic diseases among Missourians as well as special projects ranging from insurance coverage to natural disasters to determine the impact on the public's health. The office also includes the Missouri Cancer Registry that collects, reviews and analyzes information on cancer cases. More than 125 public and private hospitals report cancer cases to the registry. Under a recently enacted expanded reporting statute, reporting by non-hospital facilities is being initiated. Currently, 310 long-term care facilities including nursing homes are either currently, or will be soon reporting to the registry. Department staff use the registry and other databases to conduct epidemiological research. This research includes descriptive studies that monitor cancer incidence and mortality and analytic studies that identify risk factors for various types of cancers and other chronic diseases. OSRE also provides a cancer cluster investigation program, which follows a systematic, scientific based protocol for responding to public concerns about cancer clusters.

Communicable diseases and diseases caused by environmental hazards are major public health concerns in Missouri. The Division of Environmental Health and Communicable Disease Prevention is the principal unit involved in the surveillance and investigation of the cause, origin, and method of transmission of these diseases and conditions.

The interrelated services of this division focus on disease surveillance, prevention and control. Included are specific responsibilities related to communicable diseases, immunizations, tuberculosis, zoonoses, sexually transmitted diseases, AIDS, community sanitation, environmentally related health hazards, and hazardous substance control.

The division is integral to the Department of Health and Senior Services' emergency response to public health emergencies and natural disasters, including biological, chemical and nuclear terrorism. The division assures rapid detection through a comprehensive surveillance system operated by public health staff, deployed strategically, and prepared through expertise and training to detect diseases/conditions that may indicate an emergency/bioterrorism event.

The Office of Operations and Fiscal Services provides leadership and oversight of fiscal management systems for the division. The office provides leadership in the development of the division's budget and assures that fiscal resources contribute positively to the achievement of the division's strategic goals. The office also coordinates the development of administrative rules and public information for the division.

The mission of the Division of Maternal, Child and Family Health is to promote optimal health by providing leadership to both the public and private sectors in assessing health care needs of families and communities and in assuring that the health system responds appropriately. This division is accountable for the development and support of a comprehensive maternal, child and family health system capable of responding appropriately to identified community needs. The assurance of the system is possible through a network comprised of public and private participants. The division is also responsible for developing policy; planning systems of care; and designing, implementing and evaluating programs to meet the health care needs of families in the state of Missouri.

The division has the administrative and programmatic responsibility for a combination of state, federal and private funding to support programs that: prevent injuries, disabilities, and the avoidable negative consequences of inadequate prenatal care; assure that children, children with special health care needs and disadvantaged adults receive high quality, basic health and support services; and provide payment for care for uninsured and underinsured citizens who require specialized health care services.

The Office of Planning, Evaluation and Injury Prevention directs and coordinates a range of functions aimed at facilitating the integration of selected maternal and child health programs and support functions into community based maternal and child health delivery systems. This office also supports departmental and interagency planning to better achieve healthy outcomes for women, infants, children, adolescents and children with special health care needs.

The Bureau of Family Health designs and administers programs and interventions relating to prenatal care; Medicaid prenatal case management quality assurance; adolescent health education; school age children's health service; sexual assault prevention services; medical examinations for rape victims; coordination of statewide network of providers trained to perform safe child exams; and well-child outreach.

Contracts are provided to public schools, public school districts, and local public health agencies to establish or expand health services for all children of school age in defined geographic areas. A sexual assault prevention program and services to victims are provided on a contract basis through a number of community-based crisis centers. Major foci of this program are community education; professional education for police, prosecuting attorneys and medical personnel; short-term and group counseling for victims; hotlines, and prevention programs for school age children. A resource library is maintained and available to the public.

The Sexual Assault Forensic Evaluation-Child Abuse Resource and Education (SAFE-CARE) Network is a statewide program that provides comprehensive, state-of-the-art medical evaluations to the alleged victims of child sexual assault, physical abuse or neglect. The network is comprised of physicians and nurse practitioners who are trained by the network and required to attend yearly update training sessions. The program was developed to respond to the need for a coordinated, effective response to child sexual assault and utilizes electronic linkages between SAFE-CARE Network providers to improve medical consultation in rural and underserved areas.

Funds are available to reimburse hospitals and physicians for the costs of a medical examination for victims of rape or child sexual assault when no other source of funding is available.

Funds are also available to pay for autopsy and transportation of infants who are suspected of having died from SIDS. Qualified pathologists perform autopsies to determine the cause of death.

Home visiting services are provided to qualifying pregnant women and families of newborns in various sites throughout the state. The Building Blocks of Missouri program targets low income, first time, mothers who enter the program prior to the 28th week of pregnancy. Registered nurses with experience in home visiting and maternal-child health work with the women and their families in their homes during pregnancy and the first two years of the child's life. The program, which is evidence-based, has been shown to improve pregnancy outcomes, improve child health and development, and to improve the family's economic self-sufficiency. The Missouri Community-Based Home Visiting Program provides an interdisciplinary team intervention which combines the expertise of registered nurses, social workers, and lay family support workers to provide family support. Home visiting services include: a post-partum and newborn assessment by a registered nurse, assessment for risk factors associated with child abuse and neglect, education on child health and development, education on parenting and problem solving skills, nutrition education, and enhancement of the family support system through referrals for services to other community agencies. The goals of the program are to increase pregnancies that result in healthy babies, decrease infant mortality, decrease the pregnancy rate for females under age 18, and to decrease family violence.

The Bureau of Family Health operates 1-800-TEL-LINK, the state's toll-free number for information and referral to maternal and child health services across the state.

The Perinatal Substance Abuse Program is responsible to provide education on alcohol, the effect of tobacco, and other drugs for healthcare professionals responsible for early identification and referral of pregnant women and children affected by drugs of abuse, support of multidisciplinary resource teams in areas where a high prevalence of perinatal substance abuse exists (currently Kansas City and St. Louis), and periodic prevalence studies to determine the extent of substance abuse among pregnant women.

The Well Child Outreach Program promotes the importance of preventive health screenings for children. It is operated through a collaborative agreement between the department and the Division of Medical Services (DMS) with a special focus on children who are eligible for MC+. Funds are utilized to purchase and distribute health education materials educating parents about the importance of regular checkups for children. Materials are exhibited at health fairs, public events and professional conferences.

The Healthy Babies Initiative promotes the importance of early and regular prenatal care, breastfeeding, folic acid intake, placement of sleeping infants on their backs, birth spacing, and avoidance of alcohol, tobacco and drugs during pregnancy. Keepsake books for pregnant women and child development newsletters for new parents are available, as well as a Baby Your Baby website. Culturally diverse health education print materials are also available.

The bureau is responsible for a Prenatal Case Management Program in collaboration with the Department of Social Services, Division of Medical Services, for fee-for-service MC+ (Medicaid) enrollees. This program includes orientation to case management, quality assurance and data management for the specific population. The department also provides technical assistance to local public health agencies and federally qualified health centers who provide prenatal case management.

Intimate partner violence is a pattern of assaultive and coercive behaviors that adults or adolescents use against their current or former intimate partners. The Bureau of Family Health works to enhance the capacity of health and human service providers to develop safe and effective prevention, screening, intervention and follow-up strategies related to domestic violence.

Funds are provided through contracts to local public health agencies focusing upon building and enhancing local public health systems to address targeted health indicators.

The Bureau of Special Health Care Needs' mission is to develop, promote, and support community-based systems that enable the best possible health and highest level of functioning for Missourians with special health care needs. To that end, this program provides services for children and adults with disabilities, chronic illness, and birth defects. Services include assessment, treatment and service coordination.

The activities of the program are focused around the six goals included in the President's New Freedom Initiative. Those goals are: Families of special health care needs individuals will partner in decision making at all levels, and will be satisfied with the services they receive. All children with special health care needs will receive coordinated ongoing comprehensive care within a medical home. All families of children with special health care needs will have adequate private and/or public health insurance to pay for the services they need. All children will be screened early and continuously for special health care needs. Services for children with special health care needs and their families will be organized in ways that families can use them easily. All youth with special health care needs will receive the services necessary to make appropriate transitions to adult health care, work, and independence.

The Bureau's programmatic functions are organized into four life-stage programs. Programs organized according to the major lifespan periods can better address the unique biological, cognitive, and social processes for each period of development for individuals with special health care needs. The life-stage programs are Infants and Toddlers (ages birth to 3), Children (ages 3 to 13), Adolescents and Youth (ages 13 to 21), and Adult Transition (ages 21 to 65).

Each life-stage program is supported by a cluster of categorical funded services that include:

The Hope Service provides assistance for children under the age of 21 who meet financial and medical eligibility guidelines. This service focuses on early identification of children with special needs; funding for preventive, diagnostic and treatment services; and provision of service coordination activities for families. Service coordination is provided through 13 regional contracts with local public health agencies and Federally Qualified Health Centers, supported by bureau staff located in eight area offices throughout the state.

Healthy Children and Youth-Administrative Case Management provides preventive health services to children under the age of 21 who are enrolled in Medicaid. The objectives of this program are improved access to health services; increased frequency of health screenings; improved provider participation in Medicaid; and expansion of diagnostic and treatment services.

The Physical Disabilities Waiver provides home and community-based services to individuals with serious and complex medical needs who have reached the age of 21 and are no longer eligible for home care services available under Early Periodic Screening, Diagnosis and Treatment, known as Healthy Children and Youth in Missouri. This waiver is designed to provide a cost-effective alternative to placement in an Intermediate Care Facility for the Mentally Retarded/Developmentally Delayed.

The Adult Head Injury Service provides assistance in locating, coordinating, and purchasing rehabilitation and psychological services for individuals who are 21 years of age and older who have survived a traumatic brain injury (TBI). TBI is defined as "a sudden insult or damage to the brain or its coverings, not of a degenerative nature." Service coordination is available free of charge, regardless of financial status of the individual with TBI. Rehabilitation funding is available statewide to survivors of TBI whose income is 185% of poverty or lower.

Service Coordination is a collaborative process that assists an individual/family to assess their needs and resources and develop a plan to address those needs, including assessment for home-based services. Service Coordination facilitates, implements, coordinates, monitors, and evaluates services and outcomes, and encourages an individual/family to develop the skills needed to function at their maximum level of independence. Individuals' Service Coordinators will continue to monitor and evaluate services as long as individuals remain in the program.

The Bureau of Genetics and Disabilities Prevention's mission is to reduce the morbidity and mortality of genetic conditions by assuring all Missourians have access to quality screening, education and family-centered comprehensive health care. The bureau conducts public and professional education; advocacy; surveillance; needs assessment; resource identification and/or development; and collaboration and coordination with other public and private entities.

The genetic disease program supports an infrastructure necessary to identify, treat and counsel individuals with genetic disorders. Information is provided to the public and healthcare professionals regarding genetic disorders and the availability of genetic services in Missouri. A referral network is maintained for individuals in need of diagnostic, counseling and other genetic-related services.

The sickle cell anemia program provides information to the public and healthcare professionals about sickle cell anemia and sickle cell trait, and promotes and provides screening, testing, referral, counseling and follow-up services for Missouri citizens at risk for sickle cell disease.

The newborn screening, tracking and follow-up program provides confirmation of diagnosis and tracking of newborns with an initial result outside the expected range for phenylketonuria (PKU), galactosemia, hypothyroidism, hemoglobinopathies and congenital adrenal Hyperplasia (CAH). This program assures infants receive confirmatory testing and enter a system of health care as appropriate.

The newborn hearing screening program provides a system of follow-up, referral, tracking and case management to assure each baby born in Missouri receives a hearing screening by 3 months of age and is referred for early intervention services by 6 months of age.

The adult genetics program provides limited assistance with health care costs for Missouri adults (21 years of age and older) with cystic fibrosis, hemophilia and sickle cell disease. This program provides applicants meeting financial and medical eligibility guidelines with limited financial assistance for inpatient and outpatient services, medication and blood factor products, emergency care and home equipment. Service coordination is provided for those meeting the medical eligibility.

The metabolic formula distribution program provides limited assistance with formula costs for Missourians with phenylketonuria (PKU) and maple syrup urine disease. This program provides applicants meeting financial and medical eligibility guidelines with financial assistance in obtaining an annual physical examination and prescription formula needed to sustain life and prevent mental impairment.

In addition to preventing disabilities through undetected or untreated genetic disorders, the disabilities prevention component also focuses on coordinating the Blindness, Education, Screening and Treatment Fund. This fund, created through donations obtained by the Missouri Department of Revenue at the time of vehicle and driver's license attainment/renewal, is designed to provide blindness prevention and education activities for Missourians.

The mission of the Division of Nutritional Health and Services is to decrease nutrition-related morbidity and mortality throughout the life cycle. The Division of Nutritional Health and Services is responsible for coordinating all nutrition-related activities within the department, conducting nutrition-related epidemiological and surveillance activities, and providing technical guidance as needed. The Division of Nutritional Health and Services is also responsible for facilitating appropriate linkages between department programs and programs in other state agencies that have nutrition components.

GRETCHEN WARTMAN
Director
Nutritional Health and Services

The Office of the Division Director is responsible for the administrative and fiscal management of all division functions. The Office of the Division Director provides division-wide leadership in the areas of nutritional epidemiology, strategic planning, marketing and outreach.

The Office of Surveillance, Evaluation and Planning conducts population-based surveillance activities to determine the nutritional status of all Missourians, provides technical assistance to the division in the area of data management, and designs and conducts evaluations of division programs to determine their effectiveness. The office also oversees the strategic planning functions of the division by preparing the strategic plan, evaluating the progress of the objectives, and by assuring that operational plans are in place. Currently, the office administers two surveillance systems: the Pregnancy Nutrition Surveillance System and the Pediatric Nutrition Surveillance System. These surveillance systems monitor the prevalence of nutrition-related risk factors that can be linked to infant mortality and low birth-weight in high-risk prenatal populations, and the prevalence of specific health indicators in at-risk infants and school-age children. These data are used by program planners and policy makers at the federal, state and local levels to aid them in establishing health priorities and policies.

The Office of Technical Compliance directs and performs statewide contract monitoring for programs administered by the Division of Nutritional Health and Services. The office assures standardization of contract monitoring and accuracy as well as consistency throughout documents and processes directed by the division.

The Bureau of Community Food and Nutrition Assistance administers the Child and Adult Care Food Program, the Summer Food Service Program, the Commodity Supplemental Food Program, and other programs that promote and support the health, safety, nutrition and education of children and at-risk adults in various locations, including day care, child care, schools and other community-based settings. Specific programs within the bureau are described below:

The Child and Adult Care Food Program (CACFP) provides reimbursement for nutritious meals and snacks served to eligible participants in child care centers, family day care homes, homeless shelters, outside-school-hours programs, and adult day care centers. CACFP's goal is to see that well-balanced meals are served and good eating habits are taught in child and adult care settings. CACFP serves children under the age of 13, children of migrant workers age 15 and under, physically and mentally handicapped persons receiving care in a center where most children are 18 years and under, and adults who are functionally impaired or over 60 years old. CACFP provides training and technical assistance on nutrition, food-service operations, program management and record keeping.

The Summer Food Service Program (SFSP) helps assure that eligible populations have access to nutritious meals during the summer months by providing reimbursement to community agencies that can offer the required continuum of meals. Eligible participants include children 0-18 years of age whose family incomes are less than or equal to 185 percent of the federal poverty guidelines. Income-eligible adults over 18 years of age who have been determined by a state educational agency to have a disability and who participate in a school-based program for the disabled during the school year also are able to participate in the SFSP. SFSP has contracts with schools and other community-based organizations to sponsor the local programs and provide the meals that must meet established guidelines. SFSP increases the nutrient intake of program participants, thereby reducing their risk for health problems and enhancing their learning capacities. SFSP also improves the quality of the summer programs offered in areas of economic need.

The Commodity Supplemental Food Program (CSFP) works to improve the health of low-income pregnant and breastfeeding women, other new mothers up to one year postpartum, infants, children up to their sixth birthday, and older persons at least 60 years of age by supplementing their diets with nutritious U.S. Department of Agriculture commodity foods. The CSFP also provides health referral services and nutrition education. Eligible women, infants, and children must meet income eligibility requirements (currently 185 percent of the federal poverty guidelines), while older persons must have income at or below 130 percent of the federal poverty guidelines. Women, infants, children, and the elderly must reside in the state of Missouri and cannot be eligible for the WIC Program.

The Bureau of Nutrition Policy and Education provides leadership in the science and practice of dietetics and public health nutrition. The bureau monitors research and scientific advancements, assesses the needs for policy solutions by various stakeholders, and transfers that knowledge into information and programs that can be used effectively by those stakeholders. The bureau also administers critical programs and activities, including:

The Missouri Nutrition Training Institute (NTI) improves the effectiveness of all professionals who have responsibilities for providing nutrition education and counseling services to Missouri residents, including schoolteachers, physicians, nutritionists and others. The NTI currently consists of the Program for Dietetics Interns, the Breastfeeding Curriculum Development Initiative, the School Nutrition Education Program, and a course in Evidence-Based Decision-Making for Nutrition Professionals. New programs are added as professional training needs are identified.

The Missouri Nutrition Network (MNN) advises the Division of Nutritional Health and Services on methods by which consistent and relevant nutrition messages can be communicated to Missourians who are eligible for the food stamp program. Statewide organizations that influence the health behaviors of the food stamp population are members of the MNN. MNN advice helps assure that initiatives and materials developed have the greatest potential for success. Initiatives undertaken with the advice of the MNN include the Healthy Community Nutrition Education Initiative, the Eat for Health Campaign, and the Nutrition Training Institute.

The Healthy Community Nutrition Education Initiative (HCNEI) is designed to increase healthful eating behaviors practiced by low-income families with children. HCNEI supports local community efforts to create healthy school nutrition environments and to provide effective nutrition education.

The Bureau of Nutrition Services and WIC administers the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants and Children (WIC), and the Farmers' Market Nutrition Programs for seniors and WIC participants.

The WIC Program prescribes and pays for nutritious foods to supplement the diets of pregnant women, new mothers, infants and children up to five years of age who qualify as "nutritionally at-risk" based on a medical and nutrition assessment and who meet state income guidelines (185 percent of federal poverty guidelines or eligible for Medicaid in Missouri). Program participants are reassessed periodically to determine eligibility status. These services are provided at the local level through contracts with county and city health departments, community health centers, community action agencies and hospitals. WIC has contracts with retail grocers and pharmacies to provide the prescribed supplemental foods. The WIC Program provides nutrition education to program participants, with a goal of changing eating patterns in a positive way to improve participants' health status. The WIC Program provides breastfeeding counseling and support to pregnant women and new mothers on the program, conducts immunization screenings and referrals to assure children are age-appropriately immunized, and provides medical referrals to health care providers to address the WIC participant's need.

The WIC Farmers' Market Nutrition Program (WFMNP) provides access to fresh fruits and vegetables for WIC participants. The WFMNP contracts with the WIC local agencies to provide nutrition education to WIC participants on ways to incorporate fresh fruits and vegetables in their family meals, and to issue checks for purchasing fresh fruits and vegetables from local farmers. The WFMNP also contracts with farmers to redeem the checks issued to WIC participants for locally grown fresh fruits and vegetables. The program provides income for local farmers, contributing to the economy.

The Seniors Farmers' Market Nutrition Program (SFMNP) provides access to fresh fruits and vegetables from farmers to low-income elderly persons (age 60 and over with an income less than or equal to 185 percent of the federal poverty level guidelines). The SFMNP distributes applications to a network of providers who have contact with the elderly. Eligibility is determined by the Bureau of Nutrition Services and WIC, and checks, nutrition education information, and materials needed for check redemption are mailed to qualifying seniors. The SFMNP uses the same network of contract farmers as the WIC Farmers' Market Nutrition Program.

The Division of Health Standards and Licensure oversees the health care regulatory programs of the department. Supervision is provided for hospital licensure and certification activities, hospice and home health licensure and certification activities, nursing home licensure and certification activities, emergency medical services, registration of handlers of controlled substances, child day care providers licensure activities, inspection of license-exempt child day care providers, lead inspectors licensing and accreditation of lead inspectors training programs. The division also maintains the Family Care Safety Registry.

LOIS KOLLMEYER, R.N.
Director
Health Standards and Licensure

The Office of Lead Licensing and Accreditation licenses lead abatement professionals and accredits training providers as mandated by Missouri Revised Statutes 701.300-338. The purpose of the office is to ensure that lead abatement professionals are properly trained and have the appropriate work experience to do lead abatement work and lead-based paint detection in order to prevent childhood lead poisoning.

The Office of Lead Licensing and Accreditation staff reviews applications, checks references, administers state licensing examinations, issues licenses and photo identification badges, reviews training curriculum, audits training programs, and conducts enforcement and compliance activities.

This office is responsible for conducting random inspections of lead abatement professionals at lead abatement worksites to ensure that they are licensed and in compliance with state statutes and regulations. It is also responsible for randomly auditing training classes given by accredited training programs to ensure that they are in compliance with state statutes and regulations.

The Bureau of Health Facility Regulation is responsible for the regulation and licensing of Missouri's hospitals, ambulatory surgical centers and abortion facilities that are required to renew their licenses annually in accordance with current statutes. License renewals are based upon compliance with state regulations in the areas of fire safety, environment, organization and administration, and all aspects of patient care.

The bureau also contracts with the National Health Care Financing Administration to survey and recommend certification of providers and suppliers of services as participants under Title XVIII (Medicare) of the Social Security Act. Providers include hospitals, independent laboratories, outpatient rehabilitation facilities (physical, occupational and speech therapy), end-stage renal disease facilities, independent physical therapists, occupational therapists, portable x-ray providers, ambulatory surgical centers, rural health clinics, comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facilities and long-term care units in hospitals.

The bureau also registers medical sources of ionizing radiation throughout the state, including x-ray machines and those radioactive naturals which are not subject to federal control and inspects those resources for compliance with state regulation. The bureau provides health physics consultation to those medical facilities involved with radiation producing devices and radioactive materials. The bureau contracts with the Federal Drug Administration to perform surveys of screening mammography providers.

The Bureau of Home Care and Rehabilitative Standards is responsible for the regulation and licensing of Missouri's home health agencies, hospices and outpatient rehabilitation facilities. The home health agencies and hospices are required to renew their state licenses annually and in accordance with current statutes.

Additionally, through contracts with the National Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), surveys are conducted for certifying home health agencies, hospice organizations and outpatient rehabilitation facilities as providers under the Title XVIII (Medicare) of the Social Security Act. Consultation is provided regarding home health and hospice licensing requirements and compliance with Medicare standards.

The Bureau of Emergency Medical Services administers the laws relating to emergency medical technician-basics, emergency medical technician-paramedics, air ambulance services, ground ambulance services, emergency medical response agencies, emergency medical service training entities, and trauma centers.

Currently, Missouri's ground ambulance services, air ambulance services and fixed-wing air ambulance services make approximately 650,000 runs per year. These ambulance services are inspected for licensure every five years. At least one paramedic, nurse or physician with the capability of providing an advanced level of care to the patient staffs ninety percent of the emergency ambulance transports of a patient to a hospital. This is one of the highest rates in the nation.

The trauma program was formally established by state law in 1987 and revised in 1998. Regulations that specify the criteria for trauma center designation went into effect in January 1990 and September 1998. A network of trauma centers designated according to capability serves Missouri. Missouri's trauma center hospitals see over 10,000 severely injured patients per year.

This bureau administers the ambulance reporting system, head and spinal cord injury registry, and trauma registry. These are among the most comprehensive reporting systems of their type in the United States.

The governor-appointed State Advisory Council on EMS provides advice to the department on EMS regulatory issues.

The Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs (BNDD) is responsible for ensuring the proper management and distribution of controlled substances for legitimate medical and manufacturing purposes. Controlled substances include medications and chemicals used in the manufacture of these medications which have been determined to be abusable or addictive.

All individuals and firms who manufacture, distribute, prescribe, dispense or handle controlled substances in the state of Missouri must register with the BNDD every two years. Those required to register with the BNDD include physicians, hospitals, pharmacies, dentists, ambulance services, veterinarians, optometrists, podiatrists, manufacturers, distributors, labs and importers and exporters who desire authority to possess or perform functions with controlled substances.

The BNDD is active in the education of health professionals who handle controlled substances. The records of all registrants are subject to inspections, audits, or investigations (if needed). Violations of controlled substance laws can lead to administrative sanctions. Criminal violations are referred to appropriate law enforcement agencies.

The bureau's surveillance helps prevent the diversion of drugs or chemicals from their proper channels of distribution. This helps protect against the misuse or abuse of their substances.

The Bureau of Child Care Safety and Licensure is responsible for the regulation and licensing of child care facilities. The bureau is also responsible for the annual safety, health and sanitation inspections of child care facilities operated by religious organizations.

Child care staff provide on-site inspection services to the child care facilities as well as giving technical and consultative assistance. The bureau's mission is to ensure that all facilities provide a healthy, safe and developmentally-appropriate environment for Missouri's children.

The goal for the bureau is to have a positive impact on the overall health, safety and well-being of children in child care programs. The bureau works to meet this goal through health promotion and education, facilitating immunizations, improved meals and nutrition education, communicable disease prevention, improved cleanliness and sanitation, injury reduction, prevention of child abuse and neglect, and serving children with special needs. The bureau also coordinates resource and referral activities for parents seeking child care. Training for child care providers is partially provided through training grants administered by the bureau. Consultation and technical assistance for child care providers are provided by local community health nurses through a contracted program.

With the passage of House Bill 490 in 1999, the department established an automated data system called the Family Care Safety Registry. This registry is designed to provide individuals and employers with information regarding persons they are considering for hire to work with children or the elderly. With one phone call, the caller can find out if a perspective employee is listed on

- The Employee Disqualification List maintained by the department
- Child-care facility licensing records maintained by the department
- Foster parent licensing records maintained by the Division of Family Services
- State criminal background checks conducted by the Missouri Highway Patrol
- Child abuse/neglect records maintained by Division of Family Services
- Residential living facility and nursing home licensing records maintained by the department

Further, with permission of the perspective employee, the employer can request more detail information regarding the individual's history. Individuals wanting to be hired as a child care or elder care worker must register with the Family Care Safety Registry. There is a one-time cost of $5. The toll free number is (866) 422-6872.

Section of Long Term Care Regulation

Some older Missourians will eventually live in a long-term care facility. In accordance with the Omnibus Nursing Home Act, the Section of Long Term Care Regulation is responsible for assuring the safety, health, welfare and rights of persons residing in institutional facilities. The division has the legal authority to intervene in cases where abuse, neglect or exploitation is apparent among institutionalized elderly or disabled persons. The division seeks to:

- Inspect and license adult day care centers, adult residential care, intermediate care and skilled nursing facilities;
- Investigate complaints of abuse or neglect at long-term care facilities;
- Establish eligibility for Medicaid and cash grant assistance for residents in long-term care facilities;
- Review and approve plans for proposed long-term care facilities;
- Develop and implement appropriate rules and regulations in accordance with the Omnibus Nursing Home Act;
- With the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, determine Medicaid/Medicare certification of intermediate care and skilled facilities; and
- Provide data for certificate of need determinations.

LINDA T. ALLEN, Ph.D.
Director
Senior Services

The Division of Senior Services is the central state agency charged with coordinating matters relating to the lives of Missouri's elderly and adults with disabilities living in the home or community. Through the administration of state and federal community-based programs, the division seeks to ensure that residents remain independent, safe, and healthy in their homes and communities. Most older adults who are ill or have a disability can remain in the community and avoid or delay institutionalization with the help of support services. The Division of Senior Services administers a coordinated, integrated home and community service delivery system to assure that the long term care needs of Missouri's adults are met. The primary funding sources for services and programs operated within the Division of Senior Services are General Revenue, Medicaid, Social Services Block Grants, and the Older Americans Act. Through these programs, over 100,000 elderly and persons with disabilities receive help each year.

In 1980, the Missouri General Assembly passed legislation which requires the division to investigate reports of abuse, neglect or exploitation of persons 60 years of age or older and provide protective services. This legislation is designed to assist adults who are unable or unwilling to obtain services necessary to meet their essential human needs. The division also has the authority to investigate or refer reports of abuse, neglect or exploitation of disabled adults.

To assist in the identification of elderly or disabled persons who may need protective services, the division operates a 24-hour toll-free hotline telephone service (1-800-392-0210). When a call is received at the hotline, a division social service worker will conduct a prompt and thorough investigation of the report, attempt to resolve the crisis and arrange for necessary and appropriate services.

The division maintains a network of social service workers who serve each of Missouri's 114 counties and St. Louis City. A sophisticated case management system secures and coordinates services that most adequately address the needs of the client. This is accomplished through assessment, service plan development, service authorization and follow-up. Services are available to persons 60 years of age or older and persons with disabilities between 18 and 59. In-Home Services include personal and advanced personal care, homemaker/chore, counseling, respite, nurse visits, home-delivered meals and adult day health care.

Many of Missouri's senior citizens are choosing to remain in their own home with the assistance of various support services. The Missouri Care Options program, designed to avoid unnecessary institutionalization, is a comprehensive and coordinated approach to support people in their homes and communities.

In response to a legislative initiative, the Missouri Care Options program was implemented in August 1992. This program promotes a working relationship between hospital discharge planners, nursing home social workers and the division to identify individuals for whom home-or community-based care is a viable option.

Pre-long-term care screening equalizes access to long-term care services for those requiring less intensive care and supervision than provided by a nursing facility. The screening offers information on the array of available services and assists adults with information about how to access appropriate care.

Authority for the creation of the Governor's Advisory Council on Aging was derived from the Older Americans Act of 1965. The council consists of 27 persons appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. The term of membership for each person is three years. The council is required to meet a minimum of four times each year.

The primary responsibility of the council is to advise the governor and the department on ways to improve programs and services for older persons in Missouri. The council maintains continuous review of programs for seniors and the availability, responsiveness and adequacy of all services provided to older persons. The council is responsible for representing the interests of older persons before legislative bodies and promoting public awareness activities to enhance the independence and dignity of older Missourians. The council also sponsors Older Worker Week, the Century Club and other activities to celebrate the value of older adults.

The Older Volunteer Service Bank program is a project designed to supplement the need for respite care. Caregivers assuming around-the-clock responsibility for frail elderly may need relief from the physical and emotional toll of such care. In a collaborative effort between the division and local agencies, volunteers are recruited, trained and matched with families needing respite care. Volunteers benefit by remaining active while storing "credit" for future services. Credits must be earned by or given to persons over age 60.

Through the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended, the division is able to make services available to older Missourians. The division does not provide direct services with these funds; instead, services are provided by local organizations working with the 10 area agencies on aging who contract with the division.

The Older Americans Act funds a variety of services including, but not limited to, in-home services, transportation, information and assistance, case management, outreach, legal services, health promotion and disease prevention programs, programs for Alzheimer's victims, Family Caregivers Support Program, ombudsman programs, congregate and home-delivered meal programs and employment and training programs. All persons 60 years of age or older are eligible to receive these services and offered the opportunity to voluntarily contribute toward the cost of the service. Services are directed toward those persons in the greatest social and economic need with emphasis on low-income and minority seniors.

The act also provides for the Office of the State Long-Term Care Ombudsman, which is the focal point of advocacy for long-term care residents through volunteer ombudsmen.

The primary cost containment agency for Missouri is the Certificate of Need Program (CONP). CONP, designated in 1976 as a statewide health planning agency, has been an administrative unit of the department since 1981.

CONP functions in three categories: planning, review and support activities. The agency conducts some of the health planning activities of the state and determines the needs of Missouri for substantial health capital expenditures and major medical equipment. It prepares, reviews and revises health models for Missouri for use in the CONP.

The Missouri Health Facilities Review Committee carries out its function as the administrator of the Missouri CON law with the support of CONP staff.

The agency assists with program planning, development and analysis of health data, policy planning, identification of program needs, graphics development, strategic assessments and other special projects in cooperation with the director of the department and other state departments.

During the 2001 Special Legislative Session, the Missouri General Assembly passed House Bill 3 and Senate Bill 4, which created the Missouri SenioRx Program to help defray the cost of prescription drugs for seniors. The program is designed to aid those individual seniors with incomes less than $17,000 and married couples with income less than $23,000. In addition to the income requirements of the program, a senior must meet the following eligibility criteria to qualify: be 65 years of age; be a resident of the state of Missouri for 12 months; not be a recipient of Veterans Administration pharmacy benefits or Medicaid; and not have adequate prescription drug coverage.

Applications for enrollment will be accepted during the annual enrollment period of January 1 through February 28 with benefits beginning July 1. Applications may be obtained from the program's website (www.missouriseniorx.com), or by contacting Missouri SenioRx Customer Service toll-free at 1-866-556-9316 (available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week).

The Coordinating Board for Higher Education (CBHE) was authorized by an amendment to the Missouri Constitution in 1972 and established by statute in the Omnibus State Reorganization Act of 1974. The nine board members, one from each congressional district, are appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. The term of appointment is six years. No more than five of the nine members may be affiliated with the same political party, and all members serve without compensation. The coordinating board has statutory responsibilities for higher education services, and oversees the activities of the Department of Higher Education.

The coordinating board appoints the commissioner of higher education to head the Department of Higher Education and carry out the goals and administrative responsibilities for the state system of higher education, which serves more than 360,000 students through 13 public four-year colleges and universities, 19 public two-year colleges, one public two-year technical college, 25 independent colleges and universities, and 120 proprietary schools.

The Department of Higher Education's primary responsibilities include identification of statewide planning for higher education (including independent institutions), evaluation of student and institutional performance, review of institutional missions, development of specialization among institutions, administration of a performance funding program encouraging achievement of statewide priorities, submission of a unified budget request for public higher education to the governor and the Missouri General Assembly, administration of a statewide postsecondary technical education program, establishment of guidelines to promote student transfer among institutions, approval of new degree programs offered by public colleges and universities, policy setting for and administration of student financial assistance programs, and administration of the Proprietary School Certification Program.

The coordinating board has statutory responsibility for the administration of state student financial assistance programs. MOSTARS, the student assistance division of the Department of Higher Education, administers the following financial assistance programs: Charles Gallagher Student Financial Assistance Program, "Bright Flight" Higher Education Academic Scholarship Program, Missouri College Guarantee Program, Advantage Missouri Program, Marguerite Ross Barnett Memorial Scholarship Program, Vietnam Veteran's Survivor Grant Program, and Public Service Officer or Employee's Child Survivor Grant Program.

MOSTARS administers approximately $440 million in state and federal financial aid (grants, scholarships and low-interest student loans) to 136,000 students annually. In addition, MOSTARS conducts outreach activities to improve consumer information about opportunities for postsecondary education and student financial assistance in Missouri and to help students avoid defaulting on their educational loans and accumulating credit card debt.

gram, the state's designated student loan guaranty agency. The MSLP is part of MOSTARS, and is responsible for administering the Federal Family Education Loan Program. Through this program, the MSLP guarantees low-interest loans that are provided by eligible lending institutions to students attending approved postsecondary institutions.

The Department of Higher Education also has administrative responsibility for several additional federal programs as well as organizational responsibility for the Missouri State Anatomical Board.

The coordinating board is undertaking a quality improvement initiative designed to take Missouri higher education in an important new direction. As part of the move toward quality improvement, board members have adopted the Missouri Quality Award criteria as their framework for fostering the improvement of Missouri higher education. These quality criteria will guide both the promotion of performance excellence within the department as well as DHE efforts to encourage such initiatives within institutions.

Established in 1887, the Missouri State Anatomical Board functions to receive "unclaimed" human bodies requiring burial at public expense and to distribute them for scientific study to certain qualified schools. The board, which operates under state law (RSMo 194.120–180), was transferred to the Department of Higher Education by the State Omnibus Reorganization Act in 1974.

In 1955, the anatomical board also was authorized to receive bodies by will and codicil (RSMo 474.310). In 1969, the board was designated a recipient for bodies donated under the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act (RSMo 194.230).

The day-to-day business of the anatomical board is handled through local anatomical boards or secretaries in Columbia, Kansas City, Kirksville and St. Louis. The annual meeting of the entire board is in May in Columbia. Officers are elected for two-year terms.

Each qualified school that is a member of the board pays an assessment in proportion to the number of students in attendance. The state board secretary/treasurer receives 16 cents per student enrolled in the state, and each local board secretary receives 24 cents per registered student in the local anatomical district. The secretary to the state secretary/treasurer receives eight cents per registered student. The president and vice president serve without pay. Management of the board rests on its secretary/treasurer, whose office is located at the University of Missouri–Columbia School of Medicine.

University of Missouri System

With campuses in Columbia, Kansas City, St. Louis and Rolla, plus a statewide outreach and extension program, the University of Missouri System serves Missourians from all walks of life.

The university has provided teaching, research and service to Missouri since 1839. It is the state's premier public research university with an enrollment of approximately 60,000 students.

Providing quality teaching is the university's foremost concern. The university awards more than 11,000 degrees annually and is Missouri's only public university that grants doctoral degrees as well as degrees in law, medicine, optometry, pharmacy, dentistry and veterinary medicine.

To make the most effective use of resources and better serve Missouri's needs, the university's campuses often share the responsibility for providing academic programs, such as the doctoral degree program in nursing. The university also cooperates with other Missouri educational institutions, public and private, to improve access to its programs, such as the doctoral degree in education.

The university also partners with industry, as exemplified by the University of Missouri

Research Park (MRP) near St. Louis. The MRP provides opportunities for joint research and development and benefits the area's economy. The university also operates a technology park at Fort Leonard Wood. Funded by the university with matching funds from the Missouri Technology Corporation, the technology park is the first such project on an active U.S. army post. The university receives about $120 million annually in federal grants and contracts for research in areas ranging from agriculture to aerospace.

University Outreach and Extension focuses the resources of the university on high-priority needs at the local level. Research is conducted not only on the campuses but also through the programs in each of Missouri's 114 counties. County extension centers offer programs on agricultural profitability, community resource development, family strengths and youth development, environmental technologies, business and industry, and urban problems among other areas.

Continuing education programs on and off campus make university expertise widely accessible, as does the university's support of computer and telecommunications technologies to link Missouri's public schools and libraries.

The University of Missouri System is governed by a Board of Curators composed of nine persons appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. The board also has a nonvoting position for a student representative.

The university's chief administrative officer is the president, and each campus is directed by a chancellor.

Authorized only 18 years after the Missouri Territory became a state, the University of Missouri–Columbia (MU) is the oldest state university west of the Mississippi River and the oldest in the Louisiana Purchase Territory. The university, created by the Geyer Act of the 10th General Assembly of 1839, was designed according to Thomas Jefferson's pattern for the University of Virginia.

The first president of the University of Missouri, John Hiram Lathrop, took office in 1841. Columbia College, a private institution purchased by the university, housed classes until July 1843 when they were moved to Academic Hall, the first building constructed for the university.

Federal troops' occupation of the university forced its closing for a time in 1862. The signing into law of the land-grant college act, commonly known as the Morrill Act, gave the university 330,000 acres of land with proceeds used for the development of instruction and instructional facilities in agriculture and the mechanic arts. Through this assistance, both the College of Agriculture in Columbia and the School of Mines and Metallurgy in Rolla were established. The Morrill Act brought great encouragement to the university because until 1867 no state funds had been appropriated for its operation.

In 1892, fire destroyed Academic Hall, leaving only its six stately columns, the best-known symbol of the university today. The present administration building, Jesse Hall, was completed in 1895.

Currently, MU has the following schools and colleges: the College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources, with a School of Natural Resources; College of Arts and Science with a School of Fine Arts and a School of Music; College of Business, with a School of Accountancy; College of Education, with a School of Information Science and Learning Technologies; College of Engineering; Graduate School, with the Harry S Truman School of Public Affairs; College of Human and Environmental Sciences with a School of Social Work; School of Health Professions; School of Journalism; School of Law; School of Medicine; School of Nursing; and College of Veterinary Medicine. The enrollment of the University of Missouri–Columbia is more than 26,000 students.

College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources

Established as a division of the University of Missouri in 1870 under provisions of the first Morrill Act of 1862, the College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources offers the degree of bachelor of science. Specializations are offered in agriculture economics, agri-business management, agriculture education, biological engineering, agricultural journalism, agricultural systems management, animal sciences, biochemistry, food science, general agriculture, hotel and restaurant management, and plant science.

The School of Natural Resources, within the College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources, offers four undergraduate curricular programs: forestry; fisheries and wildlife; parks, recreation and tourism; and soils and atmospheric sciences. Advanced degrees are offered through the Graduate School.

The college's research is conducted in Columbia through the agricultural experiment station authorized in 1887 by the Hatch Act, and at area centers throughout the state that fit unique localized situations. Research strengths include life sciences, agricultural biotechnology, genomics and bioinformatics, phytonutrients, mineral nutrition, animal reproductive biology, animal nutrition, agroforestry and environmental sciences.

Through University Extension the College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources conducts educational and outreach activities related to agriculture and natural resources throughout Missouri. Focused interdisciplinary programs are organized around the themes of agribusiness management, integrated crop management, livestock production systems, horticulture and forestry and environmental quality.

College of Arts and Science

The College of Arts and Science, oldest and largest division of the university, provides liberal education programs in the basic humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences. Within the School of Fine Arts are the School of Music and the departments of art and theatre.

Presently, the college offers the following baccalaureate degrees: bachelor of arts, bachelor of fine arts, bachelor of sciences, bachelor of music, and bachelor of general studies. Students pursuing advanced degrees of master of arts, master of fine arts, master of science, and doctor of philosophy enroll in the graduate school.

MU's General Education Program is recognized as a model for undergraduate education at major public research universities—Mizzou is one of only eight universities, and the only one in the Big 12, to be honored with the Hesburgh Award. Faculty across campus are deeply involved in enterprise, fine-tuning it and working across academic disciplines to deliver a unique educational experience to MU students. One aspect of the program that has drawn national attention is the incorporation of writing across the undergraduate curriculum—two writing intensive courses. Nearly 120 sections of writing intensive courses are offered each semester at MU, representing every department in every undergraduate division at the institution.

Special programs that enhance the curriculum are the Summer Repertory Program in theatre; a summer field camp in Wyoming for students of geology; and the Center for the Literary Arts, uniting creative writing in the English department, literary writing in journalism, and writing for the stage and screen in theatre. Mizzou on Tour allows music students to audition for a performance in New York, most recently at Carnegie Hall; Mizzou on Broadway offers theatre students a chance to perform original plays in New York; and the Undergraduate Research Mentorship encourages undergraduate students to collaborate on research with respected faculty members.

College of Business

The College of Business at the University of Missouri–Columbia was founded in 1914, starting out with 15 students and nine professors. Today, the college enrolls more than 3,200 undergraduate students and over 300 graduate students. The college has 42 full-time faculty and four academic units—Accountancy, Finance, Management and Marketing.

DR. RICHARD L. WALLACE
Chancellor, University of Missouri–Columbia

The college offers an undergraduate degree in business administration, an MBA degree, a 150-hour program that confers both undergraduate and master's degrees in accountancy upon completion of the entire curriculum, and doctoral degrees in both accountancy and business administration. These programs are fully accredited by the International Association for Management Education.

For nearly 90 years, the College of Business has maintained a proud tradition of outstanding instruction and meaningful research. Over the past five-years, the college's faculty has earned more than 25 university wide teaching and advising awards. The college has nationally and internationally known scholars in every academic unit and is the editorial home of The Financial Review. In addition, several faculty hold editorial positions with academic journals, and others serve as officers of professional associations.

Three outreach programs affiliated with the College of Business—the Financial Research Institute, the Missouri Training Institute and the Small Business Development Center—serve companies, government agencies and other organizations as well as faculty, staff and students. The college's Career Services Office provides placement assistance to graduating students and prospective employers.

The College of Business takes great pride in its graduates. Over 29,000 alumni are contributing their expertise to the public and private sectors in every state in the United States and in a host of foreign countries.

College of Education

The programs of the College of Education and its School of Information Science and Learning Technologies provide preservice preparation and specialization in teaching; continuing professional education for practicing teachers, administrators, and special service personnel; and advanced study at the graduate level.

Two baccalaureate degrees are offered: the bachelor of science in education, which leads to certification to teach at the elementary, middle or secondary level, and the bachelor of educational studies, which provides an opportunity for those interested in non-public school education to prepare for jobs tailored to their education-related aspirations. Graduate programs lead to master of arts, master of education, specialist, doctor of education and doctor of philosophy degrees.

Among its special facilities contributing to service and research are: Center for Technology Innovations in Education; National Center for Middle Level Mathematics; Middle Leadership Center; Center for Educational Policy Analysis; Assessment and Consultation Clinic; Assessment Resource Center; Center for Innovations in Special Education; Instructional Materials Laboratory; microcomputer laboratories; and Reflector and Career Services.

College of Engineering

The College of Engineering, one of the oldest engineering schools in the nation, offers bachelor of science, master of science, and Ph.D. degrees. Its departments and programs include: Biological Engineering, Chemical Engineering, Civil and Environmental Engineering, Computer Engineering and Computer Science, Electrical and Computer Engineering, Industrial and Manufacturing Systems Engineering, and Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering.

In addition to its teaching responsibilities, the College of Engineering also has important responsibilities in fundamental and applied research involving faculty members from all engineering departments. A number of research centers have also been established.

Graduate School

MU is one of the most comprehensive and diverse universities in the United States and a member of the Association of American Universities, the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges, the Association of Graduate Schools, and the Council of Graduate Schools, among other affiliations.

MU is classified as a doctoral/research extensive institution by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, the designation for the nation's top research institutions. The university also is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Various schools, colleges and departments also are accredited by their own professional associations and accrediting agencies.

The scope and quality of MU's graduate programs distinguish it from other public institutions in Missouri and across the country. MU's Graduate School enrolls more than 4,000 graduate students in more than 90 graduate degree programs. In its history, the school has awarded more than 55,000 master's degrees; 1,100 educational specialist degrees; and 10,500 doctoral degrees.

Graduate programs are designed by MU's graduate faculty to meet both societal needs and the career and intellectual objectives of the individual graduate student. MU's federal funding for research projects has increased 66 percent since 1997, and the knowledge and skills gained from this student and faculty research contribute significantly to today's knowledge-based economy.

Harry S Truman School of Public Affairs

Established by the Board of Curators in May 2001, the mission of the Harry S Truman School of Public Affairs is to advance the knowledge and practice of governance in MIssouri, the nation, and beyond by informing public policy, educating for ethical leadership in public service, and fostering democratic discourse among citizens, policymakers and scholars. The Truman School grew out of MU's well-regarded Department of Public Administration and builds on its 40-year history of professional education for public service careers.

The Truman School offers the MPA degree as well as a joint MPA/JD with the MU Law School. Through affiliated centers and institutes, faculty conduct cutting-edge research, provide consulting services to public and nonprofit organizations, deliver leadership training to public officials, and bring academic expertise directly to policy makers. Policy forums, roundtables with policy makers, lectures by distinguished visiting scholars, and research symposia make for an exciting and highly relevant learning environment.

College of Human and Environmental Sciences

The college's mission touches the heart of humanity: to develop and nurture the release of human potential, applying knowledge for the betterment of the human condition. Beginning with the basics—food, clothing, shelter, finances, family and community—HES concentrates on providing scientific solutions for contemporary challenges in human lives. Rooted in the university since 1900 and established as a separate division in 1973, the college offers bachelor's and master's degrees in five departments: human development and family studies with emphases in children in group settings, family studies, child life and human development across the life span; textile and apparel management with emphasis in apparel marketing and merchandising, international studies, apparel manufacturing management; consumer and family economics with emphases in personal financial management services and personal financial planning; environmental design with emphases in interior design and interior design with pre-architecture; and nutritional sciences with emphases in dietetics, nutrition and fitness and nutritional sciences. A doctor of philosophy degree in human environmental sciences is offered with specialization in the five departments.

The MU School of Social Work educates leaders who are grounded in today's societal realities, are able to dynamically respond to the immediacy of change, and can be proactive in a manner that creatively anticipates and plans for the furture. The School of Social Work joined the College of Human Environmental Sciences in 1988. Bachelor of social work, master of social work degrees, and a doctorate of philosophy in social work are offered in the School of Social Work. The doctoral program focuses on public policy for services administered and/or funded by state government; rigorous research training; and interdisciplinary orientation. MU's School of Social Work provides the only doctoral program at a public institution in Missouri. Through University Outreach and Extension, educational activities are transmitted to citizens of the state. Research is conducted throughout the departments and at the Agricultural Experiment Station, with state and federal support from agencies and the private sector.

Human Environmental Sciences programs prepare students for professional positions in business, industry, government, education, human services and research. Accreditation has been earned within specializations. Recognized as a leading human sciences program in the United States Human Environmental Sciences is unique among professional peers in its comprehensive use of advisory boards for each department and the School of Social Work. Experts in the employment community provide guidance and support fields to students and faculty as well as perspectives from their specialized fields to enrich curriculum development.

School of Journalism

Professional journalists consistently give the Missouri School of Journalism more top rankings than any other school of journalism in the country. The school, the first in the world, offers the bachelor of journalism degree with six areas of emphasis. Three-fourths of a student's course work is in liberal arts, the sciences, and the social sciences; the other fourth is in professional journalism courses. Advanced study in the graduate school leads to the master of arts and doctor of philosophy degrees in journalism.

The Columbia Missourian and Vox Magazine, its weekly supplement, IPI Global Journalist, a four-color quarterly magazine on international journalism, KOMU-TV, and KBIA-FM serve as laboratories for students to perform editorial, advertising, feature, and photographic work under faculty supervision.

School of Law

The School of Law, established in 1872, has a distinguished and diverse faculty, all of whom are experienced in the practice of law. The juris doctor degree is conferred upon students who complete three years of study. All graduates are prepared for licensing exams as attorneys in all of the United States. In 1999, the school started its LL.M. in Dispute Resolution degree program.

The school provides both a traditional legal curriculum and practical education in such areas as trial practice and advocacy, clinical education involving representation of clients in a variety of settings, negotiation, client interviewing, counseling, and computerized legal research. The school is also a national leader in alternative dispute resolution practice. MU law students publish the highly regarded Missouri Law Review, the Journal of Dispute Resolution, and the Missouri Environmental Law and Policy Review. They also operate the Board of Advocates, which conducts a wide variety of advocacy competitions.

University of Missouri Health Care

The health-care needs of rural Missourians comprise the central mission of MU Health Care, which provides education, research and clinical services through its schools, hospitals and clinics.

Hospitals and Clinics

Patients come from every county in the state to receive primary, acute and rehabilitative care at University Hospital, Children's Hospital, Ellis Fischel Cancer Center, Columbia Regional Hospital and Rusk Rehabilitation Center. The health-care system also includes Missouri Rehabilitation Center in Mount Vernon and associated clinics in Columbia and other mid-Missouri communities. Physicians from MU Health Care also travel on a regular basis to communities throughout Missouri to hold outreach clinics.

School of Medicine

The origin of health-care education at MU can be traced to 1841 when the university affiliated with Kemper College in St. Louis. After offering a two-year preclinical sciences degree for many years, the School of Medicine expanded to a comprehensive four-year medical program in 1955. Today, the School of Medicine and its Department of Family and Community Medicine consistently are ranked highly by U.S. News and World Report for their leadership in primary-care education.

Through the Rural Scholars Program and other admission initiatives, more than half of new medical students come from rural Missouri communities. The medical school's problem-based curriculum offers case-based learning in small-group settings and provides a number of opportunities for students to gain practical experience at rural clinics and hospitals.

MU biomedical scientists have gained national attention for their research in arthritis rehabilitation, cardiovascular medicine, kidney dialysis, diabetes, cystic fibrosis, nuclear medicine, cancer and children's psychiatric disorders.

The School of Medicine, in conjunction with the hospitals, offers 35 fully accredited residency training programs and advanced degrees in the basic medical sciences. As part of the School of Medicine, a program in Health Management and Informatics is offered to educate both traditional students and experienced health-care administrators through its master's degree programs.

MU Sinclair School of Nursing

The MU Sinclair School of Nursing offers educational programs at the baccalaureate, master's and doctoral levels. It is committed to promoting, maintaining, and improving health and health care delivery in Missouri and worldwide through nursing education, research, practice and service. The school is nationally accredited by the Commission of Collegiate Nursing Education and approved by the Missouri State Board of Nursing.

The undergraduate program, offering preparation for professional nursing, leads to the degree of bachelor of science in nursing and prepares our graduates to practice as generalists in a variety of health-care settings. For the BSN program, students apply to the clinical nursing major during their sophomore year. MU also offers a web-based RN-BSN degree option and an accelerated option for individuals with a baccalaureate degree in another area.

At the master's level, advanced practice nurses are prepared as nurse practitioners and clinical nurse specialists in mental health, public health and case management, pediatric, family or gerontological nursing. Nursing education, nursing administration and school-health nursing may also be studied.

The doctoral nursing program, the first cooperative PhD in nursing to be offered at a public university in Missouri, prepares nurse scholars to assume leadership positions in service and educational settings, advancing the discipline, conducting research, and contributing to the development of social and health policy. The school's activities are purposefully designed to prepare our nurses on all levels for a variety of leadership and scientific roles, and to meet the knowledge and technology requirements of today—and the future.

Gerontology, women's health, health behavior change, and oncology comprise the school's major research interest areas. The School of Nursing is deeply committed to the principle of multidisciplinary and inter-disciplinary collaboration as a means of solving some of our most important health-care dilemmas. By focusing a major research effort on Missouri's elderly, the School of Nursing is working to improve the quality of their lives and is helping them live independently and with dignity in their own homes. MU's nursing researchers are exploring new and innovative ways to help nursing homes everywhere improve the quality of care they offer.

School of Health Professions

The School of Health Prefessions educates highly qualified health care professionals committed to fulfilling our mission of improving society through education, service and discovery in health and rehabilitation sciences. The school is credited with establishing the nation's first baccalaureate degree program in respiratory therapy and currently has the nation's only master's-level program in diagnostic medical ultrasound. In addition, it is the nation's only school of health professions to sponsor an adult day-healthcare facility. The School of Health Professions offers Missouri's only doctoral program in speech-language pathology and is the sole provider of publicly supported programs in occupational therapy, radiography and baccalaureate-level respiratory therapy. The school's five departments and eight accredited academic programs have a long and distinguished history and continue to produce many well-respected internationally and nationally recognized professionals.

The Departments of Cardiopulmonary and Diagnostic Sciences, Communication Science and Disorders, Health Psychology, Occupational Therapy and Physical Therapy fulfill critical roles in health care. The school offers undergraduate degrees in communication science and disorders, diagnostic medical ultrasound, occupational therapy, nuclear medicine, radiography and respiratory therapy. In addition, the school offers graduate degrees in communication science and disorders, diagnostic medical ultrasound, and physical therapy and post-doctoral training in health psychology.

Students gain valuable experience in the school's service and outreach centers, including the Edlercare Center, The Health Connection, Speech and Hearing Clinic, Robert G. Comb's Language Preschool, Missouri Mobile Health, and more than 800 fieldwork sites.

College of Veterinary Medicine

One of 27 schools of veterinary medicine in the United States, the College of Veterinary Medicine includes three departments and, in addition to the regular curriculum, provides graduate instruction to students in other divisions. Students admitted to the college must have completed a minimum of two years of preprofessional study at the college level. A four-year course of study leads to the doctor of veterinary medicine degree.

Each department conducts a graduate and research program as well as advanced training for board certification in many specialties. The college's teaching hospital provides diagnosis and treatment of animals, while the veterinary medical diagnostic laboratory offers assistance in disease diagnosis. This laboratory provides a steady flow of teaching and research material for the college.

Libraries

The MU Libraries include the Elmer Ellis Library, the main library on campus, and specialized branch libraries for engineering, geological sciences, health sciences, journalism, mathematics, and veterinary medicine. The University Archives and the Columbia Missourian Newspaper Library also are part of the library system. The MU Libraries, housing more than 3 million volumes, 16,000 current periodicals, more than 1.7 million government documents, and 6.8 million microforms, provide outstanding facilities for course preparation and scholarly work.

Many volumes of important older research materials are housed in the UM Libraries Depository, a four-campus storage facility that contains nearly 1 million volumes from all of the University of Missouri campus libraries. That facility is located near the MU campus in Columbia.

Ellis Library includes principle resources for research in the social sciences, humanities, agriculture and the basic sciences. Ellis Library also has a department of special collections (rare books and microforms) and a current periodicals reading room. The libraries have many automated research tools. The libraries' main web page, http://web.missouri.edu/~elliswww, provides a gateway to the MERLIN Online Catalog. In addition, over 150 electronic databases in all academic disciplines are accessible at the web page for current students, staff and faculty. The libraries also provide access to over 17,049 electronic journals.

The university collections are frequently reinforced by gifts of friends and alumni. Outstanding gifts include an unpublished manuscript of Charlotte Bronte; the library and manuscripts of John G. Neihardt; the library and manuscripts of Mary Lago; the V.T. Hamlin "Alley Oop" collection; and the libraries of the late Dr. Frank Luther Mott (dean and professor of journalism), Judge Laurance M. Hyde of the Missouri Supreme Court, Methodist Bishop Ivan Lee Holt, and former Governor Henry S. Caulfield.

Two other libraries, the Western Historical Manuscripts Collection and the library of the State Historical Society of Missouri, are open to faculty, students, and the public for study and research. Most of the papers in the Western Historical Manuscripts Collection relate to the area of the Missouri River and Great Plains and include interesting correspondence, account books, and diaries representing early and recent business, professional, political, and social life. The library of the State Historical Society of Missouri has an extensive collection of Missouriana and the early West and a painting collection including the works of George Caleb Bingham.

The law library, housed in Hulston Hall, the School of Law, holds over 330,000 volumes, including a small collection of law-related government documents. The law library is open to members of the public who need to do legal research.

MU Research Reactor

The University of Missouri Research Reactor Center (MURR) is a unique national resource that brings together the most powerful (10 megawatt) and productive university research reactor in the world and the resources of a major teaching hospital, a respected cancer center, a leading college of veterinary medicine, and distinguished university programs in the biosciences, chemistry, and engineering. Since 1966, MURR has served as a unique resource for researchers, faculty and students from universities, government agencies, and private companies.

MURR research programs encompass three major areas: biomedical sciences, materials sciences, and trace element analysis. All of the programs emphasize collaborative efforts. The biomedical science program focuses on the development of radiopharmaceuticals for use in cancer research and therapeutic applications. The trace element analysis program uses neutron activation analysis and other sophisticated techniques to determine the composition of biological, archaeological, and geological samples. The materials sciences program focuses on the use of neutron scattering instruments and techniques to define and characterize materials at the molecular or atomic level.

Educational opportunities abound at MURR. As an international educational resource for multidisciplinary research, the center draws students from every continent except Antarctica. Undergraduate and graduate students participate in MURR research projects in diverse disciplines such as anthropology and archaeology, chemistry, engineering (chemical, electrical, mechanical, and nuclear), geology, materials science, medical and life sciences (including cancer diagnostics, treatment, and prevention), nutrition, physics, and veterinary medicine. MURR also participates in the Research Experiences for Undergraduates program, a summer research program sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

The history of the University of Missouri–Kansas City (UMKC) goes back to the 1880s. Three of the professional schools now a part of the university were founded in the 19th century: the School of Dentistry, 1881; the School of Pharmacy, 1895; and the School of Law, 1895. The Conservatory of Music was founded a few years later in 1906. Around that time, community leaders were discussing the need for a university in Kansas City.

By the 1920s, two groups were planning for such a university. One group wanted to establish a Methodist-affiliated Lincoln and Lee University. The other group wanted a private University of Kansas City. Eventually, the two groups united and, in 1929, the University of Kansas City was chartered.

The next year, William Volker, Kansas City manufacturer and philanthropist, gave the newly chartered institution 40 acres purchased from the William Rockhill Nelson estate. In 1931, Volker donated the funds to buy the eight-acre site of the Walter S. Dickey mansion. It was in this remodeled building that the University of Kansas City began its first academic year on October 2, 1933, with 264 students and 17 faculty members.

The first commencement at the University of Kansas City was June 9, 1936, with 80 graduates.

In 1963, the University of Kansas City merged into the University of Missouri System, giving birth to the University of Missouri–Kansas City. In 1963, the enrollment was 4,394; nearly 14,000 now enroll at UMKC, "a community of learners making the world a better place."

DR. MARTHA GILLILAND
Chancellor, University of Missouri–Kansas City

College of Arts and Sciences

The College of Arts and Sciences is the largest division of UMKC. It provides a broad liberal arts education as well as graduate and doctoral preparation, enabling students to take their places as specialists in a number of chosen fields.

The major areas of study are art and art history, chemistry, communication studies, economics, English language and literature, geosciences, history, mathematics and statistics, philosophy, physics, political science, psychology, sociology and theatre. Several interdisciplinary majors also are offered in such areas as Judaic studies and urban affairs. Graduate work at the master's level is offered in nearly all of the college's departments. Doctoral studies are available in psychology. A number of departments also participate in the interdisciplinary Ph.D. program offered through the School of Graduate Studies. Within Arts and Sciences, the Department of Theatre, creative writing and the UMKC Debate Squad consistently receive national attention. U.S. News & World Report ranks the Department of Theatre's master's of fine arts degree in drama at 21st nationwide and the Department of English's creative writing program at 83rd nationwide.

School of Biological Sciences

The School of Biological Sciences seeks to provide quality education, to expand knowledge through scientific research and to apply the latest scientific information for the advancement of human welfare.

Created in 1985, the school serves to advance the missions of the campus and those programs that have a foundation in the life sciences. It is closely tied to and supports academic programs in the schools of dentistry, nursing, pharmacy and the College of Arts and Sciences. It also offers bachelor's, master's and interdisciplinary Ph.D. degrees.

In 1999, the School of Biological Sciences announced its membership in an exclusive national consortium to conduct research at the prestigious Argonne National Laboratory in Chicago.

Henry W. Bloch School of Business and Public Administration

Programs at the Henry W. Bloch School of Business and Public Administration provide present and future administrators of business, government and non-profit organizations opportunities to gain or enhance their knowledge and skills for effective leadership. These degree programs lead to the bachelor of business administration, bachelor of science in accounting, master of business administration and master of public administration. The Bloch School also offers interdisciplinary doctoral degrees.

The school actively engages in research of interest to the business community, Kansas City's urban core and government agencies. The school added an accelerated Executive MBA program in 1995.

Additionally, U.S. News & World Report recently recognized the school for its program in non-profit management.

School of Interdisciplinary Computing and Engineering

The School of Interdisciplinary Computing and Engineering, launched in 2001, was created to tackle the challenges posed by rapid changes in the fields of computer science, telecommunications and networking and engineering, and to offer new research and educational opportunities that will fuel the information technology and biotechnology areas.

The program offers courses leading to the bachelor of science, bachelor of arts and master of science degrees in computer science and participates in the School of Graduate Studies Interdisciplinary Ph.D. program. The master's degree program has special emphases in telecommunications and computer networking. In collaboration with the business community, the program recently received state approval to offer a bachelor's degree in information technology.

The school also offers degrees in civil, electrical, mechanical and industrial engineering.

Students can pursue their bachelor of science, master of science and interdisciplinary Ph.D. degree options.

School of Dentistry

The UMKC School of Dentistry is the oldest component of the university. It evolved from both the Kansas City Dental College, founded in 1881 as a unit of the Kansas City Medical College, and the Western Dental College, founded in 1890. In 1919, these two colleges merged to become the Kansas City Western Dental College. The college became part of the University of Kansas City in 1941.

The majority of dental students have earned at least a bachelor's degree before admission. The entering body is selected with preference for residents of Missouri and those from New Mexico, Arkansas, Kansas and Hawaii, states that participate in exchange and support programs. A graduate receives the degree of doctor of dental surgery.

In addition to the dental students, there are dental hygiene students and graduate dentists pursuing specialty education or education in the basic sciences leading to the graduate professional diploma or master's degree.

The research program at the dental school is supported by grants from the United States Public Health Service and from industry.

The clinic provides educational experience in patient care for the dental students. At the same time, dental care is provided for thousands of patients who visit the clinic annually. The patients pay nominal fees designed to make the clinic partly self-supporting.

Continuing education courses are offered for practicing dentists and dental hygienists. These courses, designed to prevent professional obsolescence, are fully subscribed.

The dental school also conducts numerous outreach efforts each year, including clinics in rural areas of Missouri, Latin America and for area migrant workers and homeless persons.

School of Education

A major responsibility of the School of Education is preparation of teachers for elementary and secondary schools. Other responsibilities include preparation of college teachers, counseling psychologists, reading specialists and administrators.

A person is eligible to apply for admission to the teacher education program after completing 20 hours of undergraduate credit. Graduates receive the bachelor of arts degree in education. Graduate degree programs lead to the master's of arts, educational specialist and the doctoral degree. Graduate degree programs leading to the master's of arts degree in education are offered in counseling, curriculum and instruction, educational research and psychology, reading education, special education and administration.

Education specialist degrees are available in educational administration, reading education, curriculum and instruction, and counseling. Doctoral degrees are available in counseling psychology. The School of Education also participates in the interdisciplinary Ph.D. program.

A vital aspect of the teacher education curriculum is the student teaching program. Through the cooperation of the metropolitan Kansas City school districts, a demonstration program is maintained. In addition, a number of student teaching centers exist through the cooperation of the metropolitan Kansas City school districts.

The experiences available through these programs are designed to provide an opportunity for the study of child development as well as the application of appropriate instructional techniques. Student teaching assignments are available in a wide range of urban and suburban school settings in a number of Missouri and Kansas school districts.

School of Graduate Studies

Programs for advanced degrees in the liberal arts were introduced by the University of Kansas City in 1939. Degree programs are offered in a variety of fields in the humanities, social sciences and natural sciences. Several are of special interest to students preparing for careers in the health sciences, performing arts and urban affairs.

There are master's degree programs in accounting, criminal justice and criminology, art history, biology, business administration, chemistry, computer science, dental hygiene, economics, education, English, history, law, mathematics, microbiology, music, oral biology, nursing, pharmaceutical sciences, physics, political science, psychology, public administration, romance languages, social psychology, sociology, studio art, theatre and urban environmental geology.

The education specialist degrees, master of fine arts, master of laws and doctor of musical arts are also available. The interdisciplinary Ph.D. program offers students a range of doctoral options. Support is available to qualified graduate students through scholarships, assistantships and fellowships.

School of Law

The Kansas City School of Law, founded in 1895, merged with the University of Kansas City in 1938. When UKC joined the UM system in 1963, the school became known as the UMKC School of Law.

The law school is housed in a modern facility, equipped with the latest audiovisual aids, ample seminar rooms, a large student lounge and individual offices for student organizations. The library is designed to accommodate 215,000 volumes. A unique feature of the building is the placement of student study stations in office suites shared by faculty.

The location of the School of Law on an urban university campus provides abundant opportunities for student participation in special clinical programs. Missouri and Kansas Supreme Court rules permit senior law students to appear in court and before administrative tribunals on behalf of indigent people. Students also serve as editors and write a substantial portion of the UMKC Law Review, a scholarly legal journal.

School of Medicine

In 1971, the UMKC School of Medicine accepted its first class in the six-year medical program. The year-round program, involving 48 weeks of study each year, provides students the opportunity to earn both their M.D. degree and a bachelor's degree from the College of Arts and Sciences. It is designed primarily for highly qualified high school seniors.

The curriculum of the School of Medicine provides an early exposure to clinical medicine and basic science education, as well as a liberal arts education that is fully integrated into the six-year program. Admission to this program as a freshman gives the student the opportunity to complete requirements for the doctor of medicine degree without a second admission process.

A unique feature of the school is the docent system, which provides a full-time faculty member assigned to 17 students for a four-year period, creating an opportunity for the student to have close interaction with a faculty member who serves as a teacher, counselor and friend.

Nearby are the Medical School's major affiliate hospitals; Truman Medical Center, Children's Mercy Hospital, St. Luke's Hospital and Western Missouri Mental Health Center. In addition, the School of Medicine utilizes a number of outstanding private community hospitals in the Kansas City area for education in clinical medicine.

Conservatory of Music

The Conservatory of Music, organized in 1906 as the Kansas City Conservatory of Music, merged with the University of Kansas City in 1959. If offers the degrees of bachelor of music, bachelor of arts, bachelor of fine arts, master of music education and doctor of musical arts.

The conservatory offers the community hundreds of music and dance programs annually by visiting artists, faculty and students. In addition to maintaining a faculty resident string quartet, brass quartet, baroque music ensemble and contemporary music group, the conservatory allows students to participate in many ensembles, such as the Conservatory Orchestra, the University Percussion Ensemble, Conservatory Wind Ensemble, University Singers, Heritage Chorale, UMKC Jazz Band, UMKC Accordion Orchestra, along with many smaller chamber ensembles.

The conservatory recently was ranked 40th nationally by U.S. News & World Report for its master's of music.

School of Pharmacy

A private school of pharmacy was organized in 1885 to serve the Kansas City area. In 1943, it became the School of Pharmacy of the University of Kansas City. In 1963, with the formation of the University of Missouri–Kansas City, it became the only public pharmacy school in Missouri.

The school offers both professional and graduate programs in the pharmaceutical sciences, including pharmaceutics, pharmacology, biopharmaceutics and pharmacokinetics and toxicology; pharmacy administration; and pharmacy practice.

The primary professional degree is the doctor of pharmacy. Pharmacy faculty team-conduct interdisciplinary research and engage in community service. Students are active in various outreach projects, including a program to educate school children about the dangers of illegal drugs.

The pharmacy program includes significant amounts of patient contact and provides training in the interdisciplinary approach to patient care. The clinical components of the curriculum are conducted at Truman Medical Center and other area health facilities. A senior externship is available at sites throughout Missouri.

The School of Pharmacy has been listed as the nation's 31st best program for the doctor of pharmacy degree by U.S. News & World Report.

Libraries

Located at four sites on the UMKC campus, library collections contain nearly 1.6 million volumes, some 7,027 current serial subscriptions, 1.9 million microforms and more than 450,000 government documents supporting the programs of the university. Resources are complemented by agreements that provide access to information held in other libraries and repositories worldwide.

The libraries employ advanced technologies to locate and deliver information to faculty, students and others. Up-to-date laser, computer and telecommunications and other advanced systems provide timely delivery of needed information. Internal operations also rely on advance systems to acquire, process, catalog and circulate materials owned by the libraries.

The libraries lend materials to any citizen of Missouri through a number of resource-sharing arrangements. These arrangements are designed to assist Missouri government at all levels and foster the economic development of the state and region.

Especially prominent is the commitment to enhance the development of the Kansas City metropolitan area through active cooperative programs with local libraries. The UMKC libraries are committed to such innovative programs as the community information program and membership in the Kansas City Metropolitan Library Network.

In addition to the general holdings, the libraries have many special collections. These include the papers and manuscripts of Paul Creston, prominent 20th century American composer; the Midwest Center for American Music collections, including those of renowned Kansas City composer Virgil Thompson; the Gaylord Marr Sound Archives; the Snyder American collection and the Baker collection of 20th century British and American literature.

Working closely with the libraries, the University of Missouri Western Historical Manuscripts Collection has the papers of such well-known Kansas Citians as Charles N. Kimball, Arthur Mag, J.C. Nichols, Oscar D. Nelson, Elmer F. Pierson, L. Perry Cookingham, Charles B. Wheeler and Lou E. Holland as well as extensive architectural records of Kansas City buildings augmented by the Holt, Price, Barnes and Asa B. Cross papers.

School of Nursing

Approval for establishment of a School of Nursing was granted by the UM Board of Curators in 1979. The school accepted its first class of registered nurse undergraduates into its baccalaureate program in fall 1981. A four-year B.S.N. program began in fall 2001. Fully accredited by the National League for Nursing, the school also offers a bachelor of science in nursing focusing on adults', women's and children's health; and the inter-campus Ph.D., in cooperation with the University of Missouri–St. Louis and University of Missouri–Columbia campuses.

The nursing school is listed among U.S. News & World Report's top 100 programs.

Continuing Education

The university's schools and colleges, with responsibility for their respective continuing education programs, extend the university's knowledge resources beyond the traditional on-campus degree programs. Through credit courses, non-credit courses, conferences and institutes, residents of the state and the community are provided the opportunity to continue their education in a manner suited to the adult mind.

Non-credit continuing education activities are carefully planned undertakings involving an academic department and usually an organized group from business, industry, government or the general public. Citizens throughout the state are served by UMKC through its relationship with statewide University Extension.

Offerings include liberal arts lectures and seminars; professional, refresher, remedial and post-graduate courses; and problem-oriented educational programs designed for the analysis and study of major social and urban problems. Formal education also may be continued through credit courses offered off the campus or by enrollment in correspondence courses for academic credit. Frequently, public forums concerned with vital issues of the day are organized and offered in order to increase both the number and effectiveness of people who work toward solutions of community problems.

While responding to the broad and varied needs of the community and state, the university is at the same time placing increased emphasis on the development of specific program areas identified as important to large professional, economic and other special-interest audiences within the community.

Admission

The Office of Admissions serves as the initial contact between the student and UMKC. This office conducts the registration of students in cooperation with the various schools and colleges within UMKC and maintains student academic records.

University of Missouri–Rolla

Telephone: (573) 341-4111
umrolla@umr.edu
www.umr.edu

The University of Missouri–Rolla (UMR) was founded in 1870 as the University of Missouri School of Mines and Metallurgy (MSM). MSM was the first technological institution west of the Mississippi and one of the first in the nation. The campus was renamed the University of Missouri–Rolla in 1964.

A product of the land-grant movement of the late nineteenth century, the campus was Missouri's response to the acute need for scientific and practical education in the developing nation. The early academic programs focused on the mining and metallurgical industries, but the campus broadened its engineering mission over time as the need for engineering and scientific education grew.

Graduate education and research began to assume a greater emphasis on the campus in the 1950s, and the school of Mines and Metallurgy became a comprehensive technological university.

In 1964, UMR became one of the four campuses of the reorganized University of Missouri. Today, UMR continues its focus on educating leaders in engineering and science and ranks among the top 25 in the nation in the number of bachelor's degrees awarded in engineering.

The change from "school" to "university" involved three major shifts in emphasis:

- An expanded curricula designed to encompass the full range of engineering and scientific subjects, including nuclear engineering, biological sciences and computer science.
- New degree programs in the liberal arts, humanities and social sciences, with an appropriate growth in the number and quality of faculty and courses.
- New graduate programs to strengthen the science and engineering disciplines, and a strong commitment to research in all areas. These changes better enabled the campus to respond to Missouri's needs.

Originally a mining school and later an engineering school, the University of Missouri–Rolla has become a technological university of national distinction. The University of Missouri–Rolla offers bachelor of arts and bachelor of science degrees in 32 fields of engineering, science, humanities and social sciences. Master of science degrees are offered in 23 disciplines, the doctor of philosophy in 18, and the doctor of engineering in nine.

School of Engineering

The School of Engineering is the largest on the UMR campus, with about 63 percent of the student body enrolled in its five departments.

Within the School of Engineering are the departments of chemical and biological engineering; civil, architectural and environmental engineering; electrical and computer engineering; engineering management; mechanical and aerospace engineering; and engineering mechanics.

Areas covered by these departments are widely diversified and include the major branches of engineering vital to the industrial progress of the state and nation. An education in one of these fields of engineering prepares a student professionally for positions, both technical and managerial, in a variety of industries and governmental organizations.

All departments in the school offer B.S., M.S., and Ph.D. programs. The doctor of engineering is offered in civil, chemical, electrical and mechanical engineering. In addition, UMR offers a statewide video-based M.S. degree in engineering management and manufacturing engineering, and an online M.S. degree in systems engineering.

The quality of its graduates and contributions made through research have made the School of Engineering internationally known. Departments within the school are among the largest and most outstanding in the country.

School of Mines and Metallurgy

The School of Mines and Metallurgy offers undergraduate and graduate programs in seven disciplines related to energy, earth resources and materials fields: ceramic, geological, metallurgical, mining, nuclear and petroleum engineering, and geology and geophysics. All offer bachelor's, master's and Ph.D. degree programs. A doctor of engineering is offered in ceramic, geological, mining, nuclear and petroleum engineering.

UMR is one of only two institutions of higher education in the country offering professional training in all of the energy and minerals engineering disciplines.

The school has long enjoyed national and international recognition for the quality of its educational and research programs. Through these, it has made significant contributions to both the metallic and non-metallic mineral industries of the state and nation. Close liaison is maintained with state and federal agencies concerned with mineral resources technology and management, as well as with industry and professional organizations.

College of Arts and Sciences

The College of Arts and Sciences was formed in 1970 by the merger of the existing School of Science and the Division of Liberal Arts.

The college includes the departments of biological sciences, chemistry, computer science, mathematics and statistics, physics, English, history and political science, philosophy, liberal arts and psychology. B.S., M.S. and Ph.D. degrees are offered by all science departments except biological sciences, which offers an M.S. only. The B.A. degree, which has been granted on the UMR campus since 1967, may be earned in English, history, philosophy, psychology, biological sciences and chemistry. The B.S. may be earned in psychology, biological sciences and physics.

DR. GARY THOMAS
Chancellor
University of Missouri–Rolla

Departments in the College of Arts and Sciences not only provide course work for students majoring in those fields (about 21 percent of the student body) but are also responsible for teaching science, mathematics and liberal arts courses to students majoring in engineering. The computer science department is the state's largest.

In addition to educating UMR students, the college serves the people and industries of the state through research and science activities.

School of Management and Information Systems

The School of Management and Information Systems, UMR's newest school, was established to meet the growing demand in industry for people with training in both management and information technology.

The school offers undergraduate and graduate programs in business administration, economics and finance, information science and technology, and management information systems.

All departments in the school offer bachelor of science degrees. A bachelor of arts degree also is offered in economics and finance, and a master of science degree is offered in information science and technology.

Students in the School of Management and Information Systems will begin with a broad range of foundational courses in humanities, social sciences, science and mathematics. Interspersed with these general education requirements, they will take "SMIS core" classes, which are shared by all students in the school. These classes reflect the SMIS theme of integration of business and technology, and represent information technology, management, quantitative and communication skills. As students complete these foundational requirements, they begin to specialize in the differing degree programs.

Graduate Study

Graduate study has been offered at the University of Missouri–Rolla since about 1900 when the first master of science degree programs were established. The first doctor of philosophy degree for work done on the Rolla campus was granted in 1926. M.S. and Ph.D. degrees are now granted by all engineering and science departments except biological sciences, which offers an M.S.

The M.S. degree is also granted in manufacturing engineering and in sytems engineering. Nine departments offer the doctor of engineering degree.

UMR Engineering Education Center

The UMR Engineering Education Center on the University of Missouri–St. Louis campus was established in 1964 as part of the continuing education program of the UMR Extension Division. It offers evening courses leading to M.S. degrees in aerospace, chemical, civil, electrical, mechanical, metallurgical, environmental and planning engineering; engineering management; engineering mechanics; and computer science. Course instruction is by UMR faculty and selected engineers and scientists from industry. More than 2,000 degrees have been granted for work completed at the center.

UMR Global

Most of UMR's global activities relate to engineering and science. In general, the program consists of three parts: (1) university-level continuing education opportunities to keep people in all walks of life abreast of the knowledge explosion; (2) use of faculty, research and library resources to assist in problem-solving; and (3) distance education.

Continuing education offerings include both credit and non-credit courses. The major graduate credit program is through the UMR Engineering Education Center located on the UMSL campus. Non-credit programs—conferences, short courses, workshops and institutes—are especially designed to maintain the professional proficiency of engineers and scientists. These draw attendance from all over the United States and many foreign countries.

UMR problem-solving programs relate to urban and rural needs and technical assistance to industries and governmental units. Statewide programs have been developed to assist city and county officials and small businesses and industries in solving their technical problems.

In 1994, UMR and the Army Engineering Center at Fort Leonard Wood established a cooperative education program.

Through distance learning, UMR also offers four master's degree programs over the Internet: engineering management, manufacturing engineering, mining engineering, and systems engineering. Some programs also offer these programs on CD-ROM or DVD-ROM.

Research

As one of a select national group of state technological universities, UMR has directed its research chiefly toward supporting education and service in engineering and science.

Research is important on the Rolla campus not only because of its results but as an educational tool for both faculty and students. Research projects are conducted in every academic department in nearly every phase of engineering and science and in some areas of liberal arts. Much of it is directly related to the needs of the people and industries of Missouri and to national problems such as energy, mineral resources and the environment.

UMR's research is focused on five areas: environmental engineering and science; infrastructure engineering; manufacturing engineering; materials engineering and science; and information science and technology. Among the notable research occurring at UMR is a multidisciplinary effort to develop technology for the removal of land mines; testing and development of new lightweight composite materials for use in bridges, buildings and other infrastructure; investigations into the effects of aircraft, space shuttle and rocket exhaust on the ozone layer; and the development of more environmentally friendly methods for removing paint from aircraft. Other projects are as diverse as basic investigations in cloud physics, the study of the gases in meteorites and moon rocks, research on lightweight structural steel and earthquake structures, plus robotics, flexible manufacturing, smart materials and glass beads used in the treatment of cancer and arthritis.

UMR's research centers carry out interdisciplinary investigations that involve different fields of engineering and science. UMR's research centers include the Biochemical Processing Institute, Center for Cold-Formed Steel Structures, Center for Environmental Science and Technology, Center for Infrastructure Engineering Studies, Cloud and Aerosol Sciences Laboratory, Design Engineering Center, Electronics Materials Processing and Characterization Institute, Engineering Research Laboratory, Experimental Combustion Laboratory, Experimental Mine, Center for Pyrometallurgy, Graduate Center for Materials Research, High Pressure Waterjet Laboratory, Institute for Applied Mathematics, Institute of Applied Chemistry, Institute for Artificial Intelligence, Institute for Chemical and Extractive Metallurgy, Institute of River Studies, Institute of Thin Film Processing, Intelligent Systems Center, International Institute of River and Lake Systems, Laboratory for Atomic and Molecular Research, Missouri Mining and Mineral Resources Research Institute, Nuclear Reactor, Rock Mechanics and Explosives Research Center, Transportation Institute, Center for Entrepreneurship and Outreach, Electromagnetic Compatibility Laboratory, and Applied Microwave Nondestructive Testing Laboratory.

Admission

Interested students may obtain information on admission and enrollment upon request, in person, on-line or by mail, from the office of the director of admission at UMR. Prospective students and their parents are encouraged to visit the campus or call the toll-free number (1-800-522-0938) dedicated to inquiries about admissions, financial aid and enrollment procedures. University of Missouri–St. Louis

www.umsl.edu

The University of Missouri-St. Louis is a public metropolitan research university located in Missouri's most populous and economically diverse region. It strives to strengthen educational programs at all levels; enhance the research and creative capacities of faculty and students; and serve the region's needs through research and technology transfer, innovative educational outreach programs and workforce development.

Founded in 1963 on the grounds of a former country club, the University of Missouri-St. Louis today is spread across 350 acres of rolling hills in suburban St. Louis County and adjacent to two Interstate highways and five minutes from Lambert International Airport. The campus consists of 44 academic and general-purpose buildings and a variety of student residence halls, condominiums and apartments. The newest of these facilities are the $11 million Center for Molecular Electronics and $32 million Millennium Student Center. In Fall 2003 the campus will open the $52 million Blanche M. Touhill Performing Arts Center and a 100-acre business, research and technology park. The campus also is planning new facilities for its colleges of business administration and education.

The largest university in the region, the University of Missouri–St. Louis enrolls nearly 16,000 students and employs more than 1,000 full-time and part-time teaching and research faculty members. More than 94 percent of tenure and tenure-track faculty hold doctoral or terminal degrees in their respective fields. Faculty research productivity is high, with annual contract and grants reaching nearly $27 million in 2001-02. This represents a 50 percent increase in five years.

The University of Missouri-St. Louis is academically divided into the Barnes College of Nursing and Health Studies, College of Arts and Sciences, College of Business Administration, College of Education, College of Fine Arts and Communication, College of Optometry, Continuing Education and Outreach, Evening College, Graduate School, Pierre Laclede Honors College, and UM-St. Louis/Washington University Joint Engineering Program.

College of Arts and Sciences

Largest of the schools and colleges at UM-St. Louis, the College of Arts and Sciences, through its 15 departments, offers a curriculum linking the liberal arts with the metropolitan area. A major in any of these departments provides a degree of specialization sufficient to prepare students for professional careers or graduate study.

Students enrolled in the college may pursue academic majors in anthropology, biology, chemistry and biochemistry, criminology and criminal justice, economics, English, foreign languages and literature, history, mathematics and computer science, philosophy, physics and astronomy, political science, psychology, social work and sociology.

The college offers master's degrees in computer science, creative writing, criminology and criminal justice, biology, chemistry, economics, English, gerontology, history, mathematics, physics, political science, physiological optics, psychology, public policy administration, social work and sociology.

It offers doctorates in applied mathematics, biology, chemistry, criminology and criminal justice, physics, physiological optics, political science and psychology.

College of Fine Arts and Communication

Founded in September 2001, the College of Fine Arts and Communication is the newest of the schools and colleges at UM-St. Louis. It includes the Departments of Art and Art History, Communication, Music and Theatre, and Dance.

Undergraduates may pursue degrees in art history, communication, music and studio art.

The college offers master's degree programs in communication and music.

The college is distinguished by its collaboration with the community. Three endowed professorships through the Des Lee Arts Education Collaborative link UM-St. Louis to the Saint Louis Symphony, St. Louis Art Museum, Opera Theatre of Saint Louis, Laumeier Sculpture Park and other local cultural institutions.

University students and faculty, as well as visiting artists, may perform in the new Blanche M. Touhill Performing Arts Center. Artwork exhibitions are housed in Gallery 210, Gallery FAB and Gallery Visio.

Pierre Laclede Honors College

The Pierre Laclede Honors College was established in 1989 and has grown to include its own campus, complete with instructional, residential and recreational facilities.

Students may pursue degrees in any undergraduate division of UM-St. Louis and many of the university's nationally accredited degree programs. In addition, students must undertake a personal writing program and pursue independent study through research, internships, public service projects and guided reading.

The college features a student-faculty ratio of 14:1, a scholar development program, a writing program and 11 honors classes. It offers academic excellence comparable to expensive private colleges, but at public institution rates.

The four-year program has a highly selective student body of about 550. The college's teachers are among the university's leading research and teaching faculty.

College of Business Administration

At the undergraduate level, the College of Business Administration offers the Bachelor of Science in Business Administration (BSBA) degree with emphases in finance, international business, logistics and operations management, management and organizational behavior and marketing.

Bachelor of Science in Accounting (BSA) and Bachelor of Science in Management Information Systems (BSMIS) degrees are also offered to undergraduate students. These programs provide students with a high quality business education that prepares them to become productive contributors in both private and public sector organizations.

The College of Business Administration also offers three master's degrees: the Master of Business Administration (MBA), the Master of Science in Management Information Systems (MS in MIS) and the Master of Accounting (Macc).

The MBA program is available in two formats: the evening MBA program and The Professional MBA On-Line program. The program is designed to fully prepare students for administrative positions. The MS in MIS program includes a specialized program in computer-based management information systems. The Macc program is intended for students preparing to enter the accounting profession or furthering existing accountant careers.

Both the undergraduate and graduate programs are accredited by AACSB—The International Association for Management Education, the authorized professional accrediting body in collegiate business education.

The Center for Business and Industrial Studies was established in 1982 to meet the research needs of the St. Louis business community. The center analyzes managerial programs and conducts applied research. Through the center, clients have access to a distinguished faculty with specialized knowledge and analytical tools, statistical databases and computer software adaptable to a wide variety of business applications.

College of Education

The College of Education provides undergraduate and graduate programs to prepare and sustain educational leaders for a variety of school and nonschool settings.

The college is consistently one of the top three institutions in the state in the production of educators. Consistent with the school's theme of "Creating the 21st Century School of Education," programs emphasize state-of-the-art technological applications to enhance teaching and learning as well as collaboration among university, school, agency, and corporate partners to prepare and revitalize educators.

The faculty, including a number of nationally recognized endowed professors, is committed to a continuous exchange between research and practice that improves the learning environment of diverse learners.

The school is divided into four divisions: teaching and learning; educational psychology, research and evaluation; educational leadership and policy studies; and counseling.

Master of education degrees are offered in counseling, educational administration, elementary education and secondary education. Within these programs, a number of emphasis areas are available, including community education, elementary and secondary school administration, special education, elementary and secondary reading, general and school counseling, and secondary curriculum and instruction.

Course concentrations are offered in adult education, educational technology and physical education. Programs leading to the doctor of education degree and the doctor of philosophy in education degree are offered in the two broad interdisciplinary emphasis areas of learning-instructional processes and behavioral-developmental processes.

Evening College

There is little difference between going to school during the day and the evening at UM–St. Louis. The Evening College conforms to the same requirements and standards as day programs, and many of the full-time faculty also teach evening courses.

Because most evening college students are employed full time, they normally carry less than a full academic load. To enable students to carry as many courses as they wish, the evening college schedules classes between 5 and 9:35 p.m.

The college is the largest degree-granting evening institution in the metropolitan area with an enrollment of about 2,300. The college offers 32 undergraduate degree programs, 28 minors, four certificate programs, a bachelor of general studies degree and a bachelor of health services degree. A bachelor of fine arts degree and a bachelor of social work are also offered.

Bachelor of arts degrees are offered in biology, chemistry, communication, economics, English, history, mathematics, physics, political science, psychology and sociology.

Bachelor of science degrees are offered in applied mathematics, biology, chemistry, computer science, criminology and criminal justice, economics, physics and sociology. Bachelor of science degrees in education and public administration are also available.

The bachelor of health sciences degree program is designed for students pursuing studies in clinical laboratory sciences and cytotechnology.

For the non-degree oriented student, the evening college offers an opportunity to update professional competence, prepare for a new job or broaden educational background. Pre-professional and teacher certification courses are also offered.

College of Optometry

After more than 10 years of study and planning, the College of Optometry at the University of Missouri–St. Louis came into existence on June 1, 1980.

The first class of 36 students was enrolled in the fall of 1980 and graduated in May 1984. This school allows Missourians the opportunity to study optometry within the state.

DR. THOMAS E. GEORGE
Chancellor, University of Missouri–St. Louis

Doctors of optometry are health-care practitioners who provide primary vision care including prevention, detection, diagnosis, treatment and management of visual and ocular health education, and devise and administer continuing programs of vision and ocular care.

The College of Optometry offers a four-year graduate professional program leading to the doctor of optometry degree. The first year of the program stresses basic health science courses and visual science courses. During the second year, clinical optometry and ophthalmic optics, courses in systemic pathology, ocular pathology and physiology, and other visual sciences are taught.

In the third and fourth years, students spend the majority of their time involved with patient care and take courses dealing with contact lenses, pediatric optometry, vision performance, low vision and rehabilitation and public health.

Admission to the professional program is based primarily on the quality of the applicant's scholarship in the required pre-optometry courses, the Optometry Admission Test (OAT) scores, interviews and letters of recommendation.

Barnes College of Nursing and Health Studies

The Barnes College of Nursing and Health Studies offers nursing studies at the undergraduate and graduate levels. Knowledge and skills needed to complete the professional licensure examination to become a professional registered nurse are available through a basic baccalaureate option. Nurses who have obtained their basic nursing education through associate degree or diploma nursing programs may complete the baccalaureate degree.

The college also offers the master of science in nursing in cooperation with the School of Nursing at UM–Kansas City and the Ph.D. in nursing in cooperation with the Columbia and Kansas City schools of nursing.

The college was established as a School of Nursing in 1980 and graduated its first class in May 1983. College status was achieved in 1994 with the acquisition of the basic baccalaureate program through the merger of the Barnes College of Nursing and UM–St. Louis.

Graduate School

The graduate school has responsibility for all graduate degree programs in the various schools and colleges of the university.

Graduate programs have been designed to serve students with either of two career goals: to obtain an advanced degree or to obtain advanced training for personal or professional growth.

Academic programs include 27 offering master's degrees and 11 offering doctoral degrees. Two interdisciplinary graduate programs, Gerontology and Public Policy Administration, report directly to the graduate school.

Graduate programs are structured to respond to the needs of the metropolitan area and to provide students with the knowledge necessary to relate effectively to the modern world.

UMSL/Washington University Joint Undergraduate Engineering Program

This program was established in 1992 and offers bachelor of science degrees in civil, mechanical and electrical engineering as well as a minor in environmental engineering science.

Students who enter the program take about one-half of their course work on the UM–St. Louis campus. The remaining half of the degree program, consisting of the upper-level engineering courses and laboratories is taken on the campus of Washington University and taught by Washington University engineering faculty members.

Students register for all their courses at UM–St. Louis, pay tuition at UM–St. Louis rates and receive their degrees from the University of Missouri.

The joint program allows Missouri to make the most efficient use of public funds while meeting the needs of non-traditional students. Joint program students are generally older than traditional students and are unable to leave the area to pursue an engineering degree. They are likely to have substantial family responsibilities or full-time employment during the day, returning to higher education to complete their studies for an engineering degree after a lapse of many years.

Continuing Education and Outreach

UM–St. Louis Continuing Education and Outreach, charged with extending the resources of the university to the people of the state, takes continuing education programs to wherever there is a demand.

The program uses the facilities of government agencies, hospitals, schools and businesses to make college credit and non-credit courses conveniently available to the public. The J.C. Penney Conference Center provides a modern adult education setting on campus for short courses, conferences, institutes, workshops and seminars.

Continuing Education and Outreach, College of Arts and Sciences, offers through the Nonprofit Management and Leadership Program courses and seminars for professional staff, board members and other leaders of nonprofit and voluntary organizations as well as for students and others wishing to explore a future in the field.

A graduate concentration program and undergraduate certificate are also offered. Custom-designed programs for specific nonprofit associations and organizations are available, and the program also provides consulting services to nonprofit or voluntary organizations.

Through the Video Instructional Program, the UM–St. Louis offers courses on all local cable television stations on the Higher Education Channel. Graduate and undergraduate credit courses are offered with the UM–St. Louis faculty available to answer questions and discuss exams.

UM–St. Louis also operates a two-way video system with other university campuses. This system is used for both credit and non-credit instruction.

The Center for Entrepreneurship and Economic Education provides courses, workshops, conferences and consultations on economic concerns for teachers and administrators. Curriculum materials are also developed and distributed.

The center is affiliated with the Missouri Council on Economic Education and the joint Council on Economic Education, a national network of economic educators.

The university also maintains the West County Computer Center, located near the intersection of I-270 and Manchester Road at 1715 Deer Tracks Tr. Computer classes are also taught on the UM–St. Louis campus.

There are approximately 10,500 enrollments in college credit courses conducted through Continuing Education and Outreach, and about 84,500 participate in non-credit programs. Non-credit courses and conferences are usually held at the request of individuals, organizations and institutions.

Job advancements, in-service training of professionals, women's counseling, gerontology, community planning, effective communication and cultural appreciation are some of the areas in which courses are conducted.

College credit courses are taught by UM–St. Louis faculty members and faculty from other campuses of the University of Missouri, as well as teachers from the general academic community in the St. Louis area.

Libraries

UM–St. Louis libraries support the educational objectives of the university and meet the informational needs of the campus community. The UM–St. Louis library system includes the Thomas Jefferson Library, Ward E. Barnes Education Library, Health Sciences Library and the St. Louis Mercantile Library. The region's oldest cultural institution, the St. Louis Mercantile Library moved to the north campus in October 1998. Founded in 1846, the St. Louis Mercantile Library is the oldest library west of the Mississippi.

The addition of the Mercantile Library collection brought the total of volumes in the UM–St. Louis libraries to more than 1 million. The Mercantile collection included 250,000 books; 10,000 linear feet of manuscripts; 300,000 photographs and hundreds of artifacts.

The Mercantile Library includes two highly renowned specialized transportation collections. The John W. Barriger III National Railroad Library, which focuses on American railroad history and is one of the largest of its kind in the U.S., contains 40,000 books plus primary manuscript documents and photographs. The Herman T. Pott National Inland Waterways Library focuses on U.S. river and inland waterways history. It contains 2,500 books and a large pictorial/photographic collection.

The other three—Thomas Jefferson Library, Ward E. Barnes Education Library and Health Sciences Library—consist of more than 600,000 volumes including more than 9,000 periodical subscriptions, more than one million government documents and more than one million items in microform. The libraries are open more than 70 hours per week during regular sessions.

Admission

Interested students may obtain information on admission and enrollment several ways: in person, by mail, or online. Prospective students and their parents are encouraged to visit the campus. The website is: www.umsl.edu. People can e-mail admissions at: admissionsu@msx.umsl.edu.

Organized in 1898 by the Missouri Press Association, the State Historical Society is directed by statute to collect, preserve, make available, and publish the history of Missouri and the Middle West.

For over one hundred years, the State Historical Society has been the center for serious research into every aspect of the society and government of Missouri and the lives of its residents. It is a heavily utilized service institution for the citizens and students of Missouri, supplying research facilities and information for every department of the state, its schools and colleges, and thousands of personal requests. Society staff answer more than 50,000 research requests each year.

Society Headquarters

The society is located on the ground floor of the University of Missouri–Columbia Ellis Library, where the reference reading room; newspaper reading room; microfilm reading room; rare book collection; art gallery; manuscript reading room; oral history program; photograph and map collections; and various administrative, research, and editorial offices are located. The society is open to the public Monday–Friday, 8 a.m.–4:30 p.m., and Saturday, 9 a.m.–4:30 p.m., except on legal holidays. The hours for the art gallery, which permanently exhibits works by George Caleb Bingham and Thomas Hart Benton and changing exhibits of works by other Missouri and Missouri-related artists, are 8:30 a.m.–4 p.m., Monday–Friday.

The Library and Its Use

Citizens, officials, and students interested in Missouri history, biography, and genealogy find in the society library unsurpassed reference collections. The library of books, pamphlets, and official state publications totals more than 457,000 items. There are also more than 500,000 manuscript items and 800 reels of microfilmed manuscripts, more than 150,000 state archival records, and more than 2,800 maps. For genealogical research, the society's microfilm file of United States census reports is one of the largest in the Midwest, with a total of 6,051 reels covering 48 states and the District of Columbia, with 1,595 reels of Missouri census from 1830 to 1880 and 1900 to 1930. A pictorial collection contains more than 100,000 photographs and sketches of historical subjects.

The society's Missouri newspaper collection is the most complete in existence. Extending from 1808 to the present, and containing more than 1,275 bound volumes and more than 40 million pages on 48,770 rolls of microfilm, it is one of the largest state newspaper collections in the nation. In addition, 301 current newspapers from every Missouri county arrive weekly. The history of any famous Missourian, Missouri community, or noted Missouri event can be traced and documented in the collection.

Specialized Book Collections

Over the years, the society has acquired a number of rare or specialized book collections that have given it added recognition as a research center. These collections include the Mahan Memorial Mark Twain Collection, the Eugene Field Collection, the J. Christian Bay Collection of Middle Western Americana, the Francis A. Sampson Collection, the Paul D. Higday Civil War Collection, and the Alice Irene Fitzgerald Collection of Missouri's Literary Heritage for Children. Collections of this type, beyond mere prestige, attract scholars and researchers and form the basis of any historical library.

Manuscript and Map Collections

The society has always placed emphasis on the acquisition of contemporary research materials, and its original manuscript collections contain diaries, journals, ledgers, minute books, census records, letters, and official state papers. Where original documents of this nature have not been available to the library, microfilm copies have been obtained. Research materials of this type furnish most of the intimate day-to-day accounts of Missouri history and lend vitality to historical writing.

The map collection consists of rare and old maps of the state as well as modern ones. In the collection are maps relating to the growth and development of Missouri and its roads, railroads, rivers, counties, and cities. In addition, the collection contains county atlases, general business gazetteers, statistical maps, official topographical maps, and early state guidebooks.

Publications

The Missouri Historical Review, an award-winning quarterly, has served as the cornerstone of the society's publication program since 1906. A benefit of membership, the journal features scholarly articles on diverse topics in Missouri history, bibliographical information on local and state history topics, and book reviews and notes. An annual Missouri Historical Reveiew article award recognizes outstanding scholarship published in the journal. In addition to the journal, the society has published over 50 volumes of edited documents, narrative and pictorial history, catalogs, directories, and indexes.

Lincoln University was founded in 1866 through the cooperative efforts of the enlisted men and officers of the 62nd and 65th U.S. Colored infantries. Lincoln University was designed to meet the educational and social needs of freed African-Americans. In 1890, Lincoln became a land-grant college which brought industrial and agricultural courses to the curriculum.

While remaining committed to its original purpose, the university, in September 1954, expanded its historical mission to embrace the needs of a significantly broader population reflecting varied social, economic, educational and cultural backgrounds. This is the unique purpose that Lincoln University fulfills in higher education.

The core mission of Lincoln University is to provide excellent educational opportunities for a diverse student population in the context of an open enrollment institution. The university provides student-centered learning in a nurturing environment, integrating teaching, research and service.

Lincoln University offers relevant, high-quality undergraduate degrees in more than 40 majors, and select graduate programs. In addition, there are divisions of Continuing Education and Adult Evening and Weekend Instruction. All of these programs are grounded in the liberal arts and sciences and focused on public service professions that meet the academic and professional needs of its student clientele.

The campus is comprised of nearly 158 acres, not including the three university-owned farms for agricultural research: Busby Research Farm (273 acres), Carver Research Farm (172.7 acres), and Freeman Farm (199 acres). Greenberry Farm, the farm headquarters, is leased from the State of Missouri.

Located prominently in the heart of campus is Inman E. Page Library, which opened in January 1997. The 80,000 square foot, state-of-the-art facility features the latest in computer technology, distance learning and world-wide informational networking. This facility is four times larger than the library it replaced and is often referred to as the "information mall." It has become the aesthetic centerpiece of Lincoln University's historic campus.

Lincoln University is unique in that it strives to create an academic environment in which every student, who has the potential and desire, is offered the opportunity to achieve academic success. Lincoln University has an outstanding faculty and caring staff, whose charge it is to serve—knowing each student and caring that each one succeeds.

Linn State Technical College, founded in 1961, is Missouri's only two-year public technical college with a state-wide mission. Originating as Linn Technical Junior College, the college became a part of the public higher education system in Missouri with the passing of legislation by the 88th General Assembly.

The original educational institution was established with funding from the National Defense Education Act as a public postsecondary residential technical institution. The philosophy of the original institution was "to provide two-year vocational–technical programs to all students who wish to prepare themselves for employment."

From the very first class of students in 1961, the reputation of the college has continued to grow and become synonymous with quality technical education because it has been responsive to workplace needs. The college has a long-standing reputation for producing graduates with the valued technical and interpersonal skills needed for advancement in the workplace. With a mission to "…offer to the diverse population of Missouri associate-level advanced technical education in both emerging and traditional technologies and support the economic development in the state," and with a legislative mandate to prepare students for profitable employment, Linn State Technical College offers more than 21 technical programs as well as customized and contract training for Missouri business and industry.

Linn State Technical College offers two-year associate of applied science degrees as well as certificates. In each program, the curriculum includes an integration of theory with hands-on application and experience. Such integration ensures the development of functional troubleshooting skills with traditional and innovative techniques, approaches and equipment. Also emphasized are teamwork, interpersonal skills and work ethic. In addition, the general education core contributes to the high level of critical thinking and problem solving ability of graduates. As part of their education, many students participate in on-the-job experience through industrial internships.

Linn State Technical College monitors the economic, industrial, and technological needs of the state as new programs are proposed for development. Programs recently developed include Nuclear Technology, Laser/Photonics Technology, and the Caterpillar Dealer Service Technician option through the Heavy Equipment Technology program.

The college is a small, caring community dedicated to the development of the potential of each student. Class size is purposely kept small to encourage adequate individual attention and faculty-student interaction. The student body consists of traditional students who recently graduated from high school, as well as working adults making a career shift or enhancing technical skills.

The faculty has a combination of higher education credentials and real-world experiences in their professional areas of expertise. In addition, they are continually updating their skills through college courses, industrial training, and workshops. The college recently completed the construction of the 94,000-square-foot Information Technology Center, which houses state-of-the-art library facilities, a distance-learning center, and academic classrooms. On-campus housing was first available in 2000, with additional units available for fall 2003.

Truman State University, founded in 1867, is Missouri's state-wide public liberal arts and sciences university and the only public university in the state with highly selective admission standards.

For the sixth consecutive year, U.S. News and World Report has recognized Truman as the No. 1 public university in the Midwest Region—Master's category. Truman State University has drawn attention from higher education experts as a premier value among public institutions in the Midwest.

Combining affordability and a top-quality education, Truman has been recognized by the Fiske Guide to Colleges as a "budget ivy league institution on a quest for academic excellence."

In addition to being highlighted in key college guides, Truman has been featured in The Washington Post, The New York Times, USA Today, The Dallas Morning News, The Kansas City Star and The St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Truman State University has a long history of being recognized nationally for its innovative assessment program and its commitment to providing a high-quality liberal arts and sciences education at an affordable price. Truman's program of assessment allows the university to measure the results of the teaching-learning process and to gather critical information on student growth and development to ensure that graduates are prepared for future success.

Truman's curriculum provides each student, regardless of intended specialization, with a foundation of knowledge appropriate to a traditional liberal arts and sciences education. It also requires major field specialization, providing each student with in-depth knowledge and mastery of a discipline. This exemplary undergraduate education provides graduates with the knowledge and skills necessary to be successful upon graduation. More than 40 percent of Truman's graduates enter graduate and professional schools within six months of their graduation.

Truman's students consistently rank among the highest in their high school graduating classes. For example, the middle 50 percent of the fall 2002 class scored between 25 and 30 on the ACT, while the high school grade point average was a 3.75 on a 4.00 scale. In addition to their academic abilities, more than 99 percent of the class had leadership roles while in high school.

Truman's 6,000 students pursue degrees in 43 undergraduate and nine graduate areas of study in eight academic divisions.

Truman emphasizes high-quality teaching as its top priority. Truman students benefit from a 15:1 student/faculty ratio, which allows for greater one-on-one interaction. In addition to the classroom experience, about one-sixth of the university's undergraduate students engage in major research projects with faculty mentors outside the classroom during their Truman experience.

Truman has been accredited since 1914 by the Higher Learning Commission and is a mem-

Founded in 1871, Central Missouri State University has grown from a regional normal school dedicated to teacher preparation into a comprehensive university charged with meeting the higher education needs of all Missourians. The newest chapter in central's development began October 10, 1996, when the Missouri Coordinating Board for Higher Education approved the university's statewide mission in professional applied sciences and technology.

The enhanced mission reflects an overall commitment to academic excellence and career preparation that has allowed Central to evolve into one of the outstanding public universities in the Midwest. thology and audiology, and teacher education. All of the university's business administration degrees are accredited by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB).

Central's main campus—with its instructional buildings, Elliott Union, 18 conveniently located residence halls, and modern family housing—is the center of university life. However, the complete physical plant comprises 1,300 acres, including the University Farm, the 300-acre Pertle Springs recreational and biological research area, and Max B. Swisher Skyhaven Airport. State-of-the-art athletic facilities include the 8,500-seat Multipurpose Building, Audrey J. Walton Stadium at Vernon Kennedy Field, James R. Crane Stadium at Robert N. Tompkins Field, and the newly developed South Recreation/Athletic Complex.

Completed in 1999, the $30 million James C. Kirkpatrick Library is a state-of-the-art electronic library, containing nine miles of data cable with more than 1,440 Ethernet connections to the Internet. Central's library is a leader in developing two-way interactive television, information technologies and Internet training facilities, and in providing access to electronic information resources to the state's citizens.

At Central, students are valued members of the university family, and their successes—both in the classroom and in life—are the highest priority. An educational philosophy combining intellectual rigor and practical career preparation allows Central graduates to reap the full benefits of their university experiences. www.nwmissouri.edu

Northwest Missouri State University is a coeducational, primarily residential, regional university offering a broad range of undergraduate and selected graduate programs. Since its founding in 1905 as a normal school, the university has shared educational responsibility for 19 counties in northwest Missouri. The university's programs place special emphasis on agriculture, business and teacher education, particularly as these professions contribute to the primary service region. All of the university's programs build upon comprehensive general education requirements.

The university places importance on developing each student's self-understanding, encouraging creative self-expression and stimulating continuing intellectual curiosity. Opportunities are provided for students to develop an appreciation for the creative accomplishments of the human race as reflected in the arts, humanities and sciences. Throughout the university, students are taught to gather, organize, analyze and synthesize information; think coherently; use computers and current technology; and speak and write clearly. Integration of the above attitudes, experience and skills into all aspects of the vocational, technological, pre-professional, professional and graduate curricula is considered essential for developing a flexible, self-renewing learner who will function effectively in a global society.

President, Northwest Missouri
State University

Accepting the responsibility to be a creator as well as a curator and communicator of ideas, the university promotes applied research which relates directly to the needs of its region, improves the teaching and learning process and advances understanding in the subject matter areas of the institution. The university encourages the continuous professional development of its faculty and staff and ensures freedom to examine ideas and express conclusions without interference. Academic freedom is limited only by the equally important obligations of academic responsibility.

Recognizing its obligation to enhance the quality of life for its citizens of Missouri, the university is a center for regional development, lifelong learning, research, the arts and recreation. Northwest is also a center for improving and expanding opportunities for access to learning through cooperative efforts with other agencies and institutions.

Northwest's student-centered Culture of Quality continually develops all individuals in the university community by accommodating and celebrating diverse learners and ways of learning and by practicing quality in all activities. In recognition of that, Northwest received the Missouri Quality Award in 1997 and 2001, the first educational institution in the state to win the award twice. The university has a deep sense of commitment to students and stakeholders, which provides the foundation by which the university operates.

Since 1997, Northwest has placed a personal desktop computer in each residence hall room on campus. This program allows students to access the World Wide Web; utilize such software programs as Windows Office, Access, Excel, and PowerPoint; and use a built-in CD-ROM. This electronic campus program greatly enhances learning opportunities through connection with a wide variety of databases as well as providing each student with the opportunity for computer literacy.

Northwest is also a leader in the development of the Northwest Missouri Educational Consortium, which promotes cooperation and links resources among educational institutions servicing the citizens of northwest Missouri. It is Northwest's goal to meet the educational needs of all the citizens and organizations of the region. Joining Northwest to form the consortium are the University of Missouri (including Extension), Missouri Western State College, North Central Missouri College, Grand River Technical School, North Central Area Vocational Technical School, Northwest Technical School and the Brookfield Area Career Center. The three Small Business Development centers in the region (Maryville, St. Joseph and Chillicothe) also participate.

The Consortium serves 22 counties in the northwest quadrant of the state. These counties include the 19 counties constituting Northwest's historic service region plus three counties served by North Central Missouri College that do not overlap with Northwest's region.

The Missouri Academy of Science, Mathematics and Computing was founded at Northwest in 2000. The rigorous program is an accelerated, two-year residential program for high school students academically talented in science, mathematics or technology. Students are challenged by college coursework tailored to individual abilities and taught by Northwest faculty. Students who complete the program earn an associate of science degree.

Southeast Missouri State University, serving more than 9,500 students each year, is located in Cape Girardeau, a community of more than 40,000 residents on the west bank of the Mississippi River.

The university benefits from a rich exchange of community, regional and university ideas. Because experiential learning–internships, student teaching, discipline-specific practice and research–is the hallmark of the institution, the community and the region offer extensive partnerships to create opportunities for students to combine classroom theory with practical experience in the "real world." Nearly 100 percent of the academic programs at Southeast offer an opportunity for experiential or "real world" learning.

For example, education majors test their abilities in one of many area schools; communication majors work in the industries of radio, television, newspapers, advertising or public relations; and criminal justice students learn alongside local and regional law enforcement professionals. In fact, at Southeast, the community and region are viewed as a laboratory no university alone could afford to build.

The career advantage given to Southeast graduates by this effective combination of traditional classroom theory and practical experience gives rise to the university's slogan, "Experience Southeast … Experience Success."

Recently, Southeast was named among a select few institutions nationwide listed as a "hidden treasure" by the Kaplan National Guidance Counselor Survey.

Founded in 1873, Southeast has served the residents of a 26-county area from the Arkansas state line to the city of St. Louis in a territory that is larger than the area of nine states and in an area where the population is larger than the population of 17 states. The university has awarded more than 60,000 degrees and enhanced the lives of thousands more.

The current enrollment includes more than 8,300 undergraduates and some 1,200 graduate students. Enrollment at Southeast has been on the rise over the past eight years—so much so that, in 2002, a new residence hall was opened. Southeast was the only public college or university in Missouri to open a new residence hall. The facility primarily houses some 300 returning students and features suite-style living and high-speed internet access in every room.

Southeast is an ideal size for students seeking a mid-sized, friendly place to learn, experience and succeed at both academic pursuits and extracurricular opportunities. With almost 400 full-time faculty, 90 percent holding doctoral or terminal degrees in their disciplines, the university is large enough to provide more than 150 academic areas of study. And with a student to faculty ratio of 17:1, the university is small enough for students to get to know each other on an individual basis, and for students and faculty to interact on a personal basis. It is in this environment that the university believes the best learning takes place.

Southeast also has a diverse student population. Students attend Southeast from throughout southeast Missouri, southern and western Illinois, and the St. Louis metropolitan area. In addition, students from 45 countries and all 50 states add to the unique Southeast experience.

Five colleges and three schools: As a comprehensive university—one which offers a variety of professional and educational programs—Southeast offers students a wide array of choices.

These academic programs have been organized within the structure of five colleges and three schools. These include the Donald L. Harrison College of Business; the Colleges of Education, Health and Human Services, Liberal Arts, and Science and Mathematics; the School of Polytechnic Studies; the School of University Studies, which governs the general education courses required of all students; and the School of Graduate Studies and Research, which oversees postgraduate degree programs at the master, specialist and doctoral levels. A fourth school–the School of Visual and Performing Arts–is under development.

Programs in demand: Southeast's program in teacher education is nationally recognized and accredited. The innovative teacher training begins during a student's first year at the university, with field opportunities that require students to experience a variety of teaching settings. The senior year culminates with a full semester of student teaching.

Southeast's leadership in its education program has resulted in its acceptance into the prestigious Renaissance Group of institutions with exemplary programs in education and membership in the Coalition of Universities and Businesses for Education. Southeast also is a two-time winner of the Christa McAuliffe Showcase for Excellence Award in teacher education, which is presented by the American Association of State Colleges and Universities.

Some of the other popular academic areas at Southeast are pre-med, business, science (biological, physical and environmental), criminal justice, computer science, communication, music, art, theatre and dance, social work, and pre-engineering. Unique programs such as historic preservation, sports management, athletic training and corporate video round out an array of choices that bring students from around the country to study and live on the campus of Southeast Missouri State University.

Kent Library: To support student research and learning, Kent Library implemented MOBIUS, the shared, statewide computerized library system, expanding access to an impressive 14 million titles. In addition, the library gives students access to 6,638 full-text periodicals online. Kent Library's Rare Book Room is home to the Louis Daniel Brodsky Faulkner Collection, which gives Southeast the distinction of having one of the world's four most significant collections of William Faulkner literary materials.

Outreach centers: In partnership with other institutions in the Southeast Missouri Educational Consortium, Southeast operates four higher education outreach centers. The Harry L. Crisp Bootheel Education Center, established in 1987, brings additional educational opportunities to the people in southeast Missouri at its site in Malden. The Malden Center has been recognized as one of 20 model rural postsecondary programs in the United States and has received the Distinguished Program Award from the National Association for Continuing Higher Education. The Sikeston Area Higher Education Center began its operations in a temporary home in 1998, and moved into a new 30,000-square-foot facility in 2000. A new Kennett Area Higher Education Center also opened in 2000 and the university opened a fourth area higher education center in Perryville in 2002. Courses in these centers are taught by faculty from the university and cooperating community colleges, both on site and via instructional television or the Internet. In addition, the university offers bachelor's degree completion opportunities for holders of associate's degrees in selected fields at Poplar Bluff, St. Louis and other locations throughout the region, in cooperation with the community colleges and the University of Missouri.

The university has constructed and equipped a comprehensive, area-wide distance learning network called SEE-NET as part of an enhanced mission plan approved by the Coordinating Board for Higher Education. The outreach centers also are a part of Southeast's enhanced mission, which emphasizes better access to postsecondary education throughout Southeast Missouri. At no other time have so many residents of the southeast Missouri region been enrolled in the region's institutions of higher education.

Accreditation and affiliations: The university is fully accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools and the National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education.

In addition, the university holds specific accreditations and/or approvals from: AACSB–The International Association for Management Education, American Chemical Society, American Park and Recreation Society, American Speech-Language-Hearing Association, Commission on Accreditation for Dietetics Education, Commission on Accreditation of Allied Health Education Programs (Athletic Training), Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education, Council for Accreditation of Counseling and Related Education Programs, Council on Social Work Education, Engineering Accreditation Commission of the Accreditation Board for Engineering and Technology, National Association for the Education of Young Children, National Association of Industrial Technology, National Association of Schools and Colleges of Music, National League for Nursing and the National Recreation and Park Association/American Association.

Athletics: Southeast participates in NCAA Division I athletics as a member of the Ohio Valley Conference. Men's sports include baseball, basketball, cross country, football, golf, and indoor and outdoor track. Women's sports include basketball, cross country, gymnastics, soccer, softball, tennis, indoor and outdoor track, and volleyball.

University Foundation: Gifts from friends of the university and alumni enable the institution to supplement taxpayers' dollars for the benefit of the students. In 1983, the Southeast Missouri University Foundation was established, and funds raised since then have been used strategically to provide a margin of excellence and to bring national attention to Southeast. For instance, the new Otto and Della Seabaugh Building, which houses the School of Polytechnic Studies, was completed in 2001. This building was made possible by the gifts of the Seabaughs and assisted the School of Polytechnic Studies in being recognized as a Missouri Center for Excellence in Advanced Manufacturing Technology.

Donors are helping to make possible the River Campus, a cooperative project with the state of Missouri, the city of Cape Girardeau and the federal government. The River Campus facilities, which will house the School of Visual and Performing Arts, will be constructed on the 16.6-acre St. Vincent's College and Seminary property adjacent to the new Bill Emerson Memorial Bridge. The 100,000-square-foot proposed structure will include a 1,000-seat performance hall, a recital hall, a regional museum, rehearsal rooms, theatres, dance and art studios, and related facilities.

Admission: Southeast Missouri State University is a moderately selective university. As defined by the Missouri Coordinating Board for Higher Education, this means that students who have taken the required college preparatory curriculum in high school and who have met certain testing guidelines are eligible for admission to the university. Call the Admissions Office at (573) 651-2590; e-mail to admissions@semo.edu or visit the university's web site at www.semo.edu.

Southwest Missouri State University (SMSU) is a multi-campus metropolitan university system with a statewide mission in public affairs whose purpose is to develop educated persons while focusing on five themes: professional education, health, business and economic development, creative arts, and science and the environment.

SMSU campuses are structured to address the special needs of the urban and rural populations they serve. SMSU-Springfield is a selective admissions, graduate-level teaching and research institution. SMSU-Mountain Grove houses the department of fruit science, part of the SMSU School of Agriculture in the College of Natural and Applied Sciences. The fruit science department operates the Missouri State Fruit Experiment Station and the Mid-America Viticulture and Enology Center, which serve the Missouri fruit production, processing and wine industries. The SMSU-Extended Campus provides anytime, anyplace learning opportunities through telecourses, Internet-based instruction and through its interactive video network (BearNet) and sub-networks (GrizzNet and VineNet). In addition, the university operates several special campuses to meet the needs of Missourians and SMSU students. The university also operates the Bull Shoals Field Station near Forsyth, Baker's Acres and Observatory near Marshfield, and the SMSU Graduate Center in Joplin.

SMSU is the second-largest university in the state. It is located in the state's third-largest city with a metropolitan service area of approximately 330,000. Its student body is geographically diverse, with students from all of the 114 counties in Missouri, and from 45 states and 91 foreign countries. Since 1986, more than 250 National Merit Finalists have enrolled at SMSU. The university currently has nearly 450 valedictorians and salutatorians in its student body.

Public Affairs: SMSU is distinguished by its statewide mission in public affairs, a campuswide commitment to foster competence and responsibility in the common vocation of citizenship. Integrated throughout the student experience, the public affairs mission seeks to develop citizens of enhanced character, more sensitive to the needs of community, more competent and committed in their ability to contribute to society, and more civil in their habits of thought, speech and action.

Public affairs are manifested across campus in a number of forms. A citizenship and service-learning program allows students to engage in community service and apply academic knowledge to solve real-life problems while earning academic credit. A junior-level capstone course immerses students in current public affairs issues, encouraging them to view the public implications of their chosen discipline. The Campus Volunteer Center matches students, faculty and staff with community volunteer opportunities.

SMSU is the host campus for the Missouri Campus Compact, a statewide coalition of university and college presidents dedicated "to helping students develop the values and skills of civic participation through involvement in public service." Missouri Campus Compact currently has 26 members, with representatives from each of the categories of four-year public, four-year private, and two-year colleges and universities.

A series of speakers have come to campus to address citizenship and other public affairs issues. The speakers have included three Nobel Peace Prize winners, F.W. de Klerk, Elie Wiesel and Jody Williams. Other speakers include former U.S. Senator Bill Bradley, 1997 Inaugural Poet Miller Williams, and senior editor of The Wall Street Journal Joseph N. Boyce.

These and other efforts resulted in the John Templeton Foundation naming Southwest Missouri State University to its Templeton Guide: Colleges that Encourage Character Development in 1999, a designation received by 100 universities in the country. This is the second time SMSU has been honored by the foundation. Additionally, SMSU was one of only four public institutions nationwide to be selected for both the Templeton Honor Roll and the Presidential Leadership sections. Four SMSU university programs also received recognition.

History: Southwest Missouri State University was founded as the Missouri State Normal School, Fourth District, by legislative action on March 17, 1905. SMSU first opened its doors in June 1906. Almost 100 years and three name changes later, SMSU is a comprehensive state university system offering a wide variety of programs and services to its students and the citizens of the state.

During the 1995 session of the Missouri General Assembly, SMSU received a statewide mission in public affairs, making it the only Missouri university emphasizing the development of aware, committed and active participants in tomorrow's society.

Facilities: Southwest Missouri State University's main campus is located on 225 acres in the heart of Springfield. The 125-acre William H. Darr Agricultural Center exists in the southwest area of the city. SMSU's main campus has 18 classroom buildings, an administrative building, a library, 11 residence halls, a multipurpose recreational facility, a sports complex, a health center and a campus-wide transit facility. The Juanita K. Hammons Hall for the Performing Arts hosts a variety of musical, dance and theatrical presentations. Among the more significant projects is the $29.6 million Meyer Library renovation and addition, which was rededicated in September 2002.

Enrollment: In the fall of 2002, SMSU's enrollment was 20,497 with 18,916 students (15,570 undergraduates and 3,346 graduate students) on the Springfield campus and 1,720 on the West Plains campus. (There are 139 students enrolled on both campuses, but they are only counted once in the grand total.) The percentage of graduate students on the Springfield campus has more than doubled since 1992, from 8.3 percent to 17 percent.

Academic programs: SMSU's Springfield campus offers more than 140 degree programs and options within 44 academic departments. The university is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools as well as by 21 professional associations, including the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education, National Association of Schools of Music, National Association of Schools for Public Affairs and Administration, the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the American Chemical Society, the Council on Social Work Education, and the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business. The university's academic programs are organized within nine colleges: Arts and Letters, Business Administration, Education, Health and Human Services, Humanities and Public Affairs, Natural and Applied Sciences, Continuing Education and the Extended University, Graduate College, and the University College.

The university has a wide variety of international education programs available to students including programs in London, Costa Rica, Chile, Brazil, India and China, and has established a branch campus at Liaoning Normal University in Dalian, China. SMSU also is a member of the International Student Exchange Consortium, which provides for reciprocal exchanges to programs in more than 30 countries. In addition, SMSU's College of Continuing Education and the Extended University offers a wide variety of programs, both credit and non-credit, for adult students who are returning to college. Numerous courses tailored to meet the needs of area employers are offered as well. SMSU has the largest cooperative program in the state, with more than 1,200 students participating in internships in the public and private sectors.

the state and national averages. The average ACT score for first-time freshmen was 23.5 in fall 2002 compared to 21.7 in fall 1995. With the planned full implementation of selective admission standards over the next several years, the academic profile of entering freshmen will continue to improve.

Further evidence of academic excellence at SMSU has been the recognition that student teams have received in regional and national student competitions in a number of areas including debate, advertising and media, journalism and film. The Honors College at SMSU offers extraordinary opportunities for outstanding students.

Faculty and staff: On the Springfield campus, SMSU has a total of 731 full-time instructional faculty and 269 part-time faculty. The student to faculty ratio is approximately 18:1.

Research: The principle focus of the university is applied research geared to serving the needs of diverse constituencies in the public and private sectors. Faculty are encouraged to pursue their individual and scholarly activities. The university also engages in cooperative research projects coordinated through a variety of research centers. Among these are the Center for Social Sciences and Public Policy Research, which conducts surveys and polls on a variety of issues aimed at meeting community and state concerns; the Center for Resource Planning and Management, which conducts research throughout southwest Missouri focusing on local government planning and health needs; and the Center for Archaeological Research, which conducts studies to discover and identify the artifacts of early civilizations.

Library: The SMSU Libraries are comprised of the Duane G. Meyer Library, the Music Library, the Paul Evans Library of Fruit Science, and the Greenwood Laboratory School Library. These library collections include 807,000 accessioned volumes and current subscriptions to 4,238 periodicals and newspapers with over one million units on microfilm, microfiche and microcard. Collections of audiovisual materials total over 33,500 titles. More than 901,000 state, federal and United Nations documents are held as a result of Meyer Library being a selective federal depository, a full depository for state publications, and as of December 2000, a full depository for United Nations publications. The cartographic collection is one of the largest in the state of Missouri with over 180,000 maps, aerial photos and other items.

The addition and renovation of Meyer Library was completed in 2002. The project doubled the size of the library and provided 12 group study rooms, a large area of compact shelving, an expanded campus computer lab, multimedia work stations, a new curriculum resource center, a greatly expanded special collections allowing all collections to be housed in the same location, and three classroom spaces. Also housed in the new facility are Assistive Technology, Instructional Technology and Media Services, and the Academic Development Center.

A number of special collections are housed in Meyer Library. The Ozarkiana Collection is a selective collection of books, journals and manuscripts about the Ozarks. The William J. Jones French Literature Collection contains over 2,000 items by and about poet Arthur Rimbaud and Michel Butor. The Ozarks Labor Union Archives is the largest repository of records documenting labor history in the Ozarks. Several endowments support this collection and a grant of over $58,000 was utilized in 1998-2000 to process special sections of the holdings. University Archives serves as the institutional memory of the university by identifying, acquiring, preserving and providing access to records that chronicle the history and development of the university. A grant of over $130,000 is helping to process these materials.

Beginning in July 2000, the state-wide MOBIUS system was implemented for the southwest area and is known as SWAN (Southwest Academic Network) with access to holdings of all cataloged materials in the member libraries. Direct patron borrowing of resources with delivery of materials in 48 hours has greatly expanded access to all types of materials. Most of the bibliographic data for this system is created as materials are cataloged using the On-line Computer Library Center, Inc., (OCLC), a database with more than 48 million bibliographic records. OCLC also is utilized for interlibrary loan and reference, with links to over 42,000 libraries in 89 countries. Electronic access is provided to reference resources, course reserve materials and licensed commercial citation and full-text databases on the libraries' homepage at http://library.smsu.edu. Currently, over 75 electronic databases are available to the SMSU community. In addition to citations from thousands of journals, newspapers and books, these databases contain articles from over 3,000 journals and newspapers in full text. SMSU Libraries also maintain an extensive index of authoritative Web-based reference resources, organized by broad subject categories which include full-text, analytical, indexing and other resources.

A minor in library science is offered and graduate-level courses prepare students for certification as library media specialists. A cooperative effort with the University of Missouri–Columbia makes it possible for graduate students to enroll in SMSU courses for UM–C credit in the library science master's degree program.

During the fall and spring semesters, Meyer Library is open 99 hours a week.

Computer facilities: SMSU offers faculty members and students free use of its excellent computer facilities for class assignments and research. The hardware includes an upgraded IBM ES9000 mainframe, numerous file servers running highly secured NT operating systems, and a wide selection of networked microcomputers. The campus backbone network offers access to the Internet and to the campus host computers and servers from many campus locations. Major computer labs in Glass Hall, Cheek Hall and Strong Hall offer access to the campus computing resources from PC-compatible environments. Computers in the residence halls allow students to access the online resources of Meyer Library, the campus computing network and the Internet from their rooms. Dial-up access to campus computing resources is supported.

SMSU–West Plains

West Plains 65775
Telephone: (417) 255-7255
www.wp.smsu.edu

SMSU–West Plains is one of three campuses within the SMSU system. The West Plains Campus is a teaching institution of higher education offering two-year associate of arts, associate of science and associate of applied science degrees, certificates and other courses as needed by employers and citizens of the area served. The college provides a liberal arts transfer curriculum at the freshman and sophomore levels, selected occupational programs, and a variety of continuing education courses.

History and setting: SMSU–West Plains was founded in 1963 as the West Plains residence center. In 1977, the SMSU Board of Regents and, subsequently, the Missouri General Assembly, designated the name West Plains Campus of Southwest Missouri State University to replace Residence Center. In 1981, the legislature enacted a permanent status bill for the campus. In 1991, the legislature passed House Bill 51 which gave the West Plains Campus the authority to offer "one-year certificates, two-year associate degrees and credit and non-credit courses."

Facilities: The campus is comprised of 15 buildings and 30 acres. The newest addition is the Michael J. Lybyer Enhanced Technology Center. The 40,500-square-foot center houses several classrooms, technical laboratories, computer centers and the Center for Business and Industry Training.

Enrollment: The fall 2002 maximum headcount enrollment was 1,720 students. The majority of students come from a seven-county area of the south-central Missouri Ozarks region and from adjacent areas in north Arkansas.

Academic programs: The college offers an Associate of Arts degree (A.A.) in general studies and Associate of Science degree (A.S.) in nursing. SMSU–West Plains also offers Associate of Applied Science degrees (A.A.S.) in Business, Child Development, Computer Technology, General Technology, Industrial Technology and Law Enforcement. Community-oriented continuing education courses also are offered at the West Plains campus, as well as selected intersession and upper-level courses offered through the university departments and the continuing education office.

SMSU–West Plains also offers courses at extended campuses in Mountain Grove and Houston, Mo. The associate of arts in general studies degree can be completed at the Mountain Grove campus. At SMSU's branch campus at Lianoning Normal University in Dalian, China, SMSU–West Plains offers courses leading to the associate of arts in general studies degree, with an emphasis on business.

The college is accredited by the Higher Learning Commission and is a member of the North Central Association.

The nursing program has full accreditation from the National League for Nursing. SMSU–West Plains is a member of the American Association of Community Colleges and the Missouri Community College Association.

SMSU–Mountain Grove Campus

Mountain Grove 65711
Telephone: (417) 926-4105
www.mtngrv.smsu.edu

The Mountain Grove Campus is the research campus in the SMSU System. Since 1899, the State Fruit Experiment Station has promoted growth of the Missouri fruit crop industry through a long-term program of basic and applied research and an industry advisory program. The department of fruit science and the Mid-America Viticulture and Enology Center also are located on the campus. Along with Cornell University in the East Coast and the University of California-Davis on the West Coast, SMSU–Mountain Grove serves the grape industry in Mid-America.

In cooperation with the departments of agriculture, biology and chemistry, the department of fruit science at the SMSU–Mountain Grove Campus offers classes and research as part of a cooperative master's degree in plant science, as well as a variety of undergraduate internships and a limited number of undergraduate classes.

SMSU–Mountain Grove has a world-class research program to explore the genetic resources in grape species native to North America. Genomic technologies are the most powerful tools of modern biology. They enable the exploration of the entire DNA blueprint of an organism, including the activity and function of most genes.

History: The Mountain Grove campus is home to the State Fruit Experiment Station, which was established by a legislative act in 1899 and is the oldest identifiable segment of SMSU. Until 1974, the station was operated as a state agency under a board of trustees appointed by the governor. As a result of the Omnibus State Reorganization Act of 1974, administrative responsibility for the State Fruit Experiment Station was given to the Board of Governors of SMSU. Following university reorganization in 1994, the station was assigned to the Department of Fruit Science in the College of Natural and Applied Sciences.

Staff: There are 24 full-time employees, including nine faculty, five professional staff and 10 support staff. In addition to carrying out research and advisory programs, the faculty teach and guide graduate students in their thesis research for the master of science degree and provide courses for undergraduate students interested in fruit science.

Facilities: The State Fruit Experiment Station is located on the 190-acre research campus on the outskirts of Mountain Grove, 65 miles east of Springfield. Constructed on the campus are the following buildings: Shepard Hall, which houses laboratory facilities and offices and the Paul Evans Library of Fruit Science; Faurot Hall, which underwent a $1.1 million renovation in 1998 and now houses the Evans Library, classrooms, a plant science laboratory and offices; a fruit processing laboratory; a classroom building; two greenhouses; a United States Weather Bureau substation; equipment storage buildings; a shop; and several miscellaneous buildings. About 180 acres are designated for fruit research plantings.

Research: Research is conducted in pomology, enology, viticulture, plant pathology, entomology, molecular genetics and plant physiology. The fruit crops under investigation include apples, grapes, blueberries, peaches, strawberries, blackberries and raspberries, as well as species of lesser economic importance. Information derived from the station's research is disseminated through advisory programs to fruit growers and processors throughout Missouri through bulletins, newsletters, a newspaper column, conferences, workshops and personal consultation.

The station is the site of extensive testing of new fruit varieties and selections from throughout the world for their adaptability to Missouri soil and climate and their resistance to diseases. Research on the culture of fruit crops is conducted on nutrient and water requirements, pruning and training systems, growth regulators and rootstocks. Plant pathogens and insect pests are studied for clues which may help in reducing their damage to fruit crops. Research on the reduction of pesticides used for control of diseases, insects and weeds is a major effort.

Located in a natural grape environment, the station has been the site of extensive grape experimentation since 1900, including some of the first experiments in the United States on grafting rootstocks on American grapes. Today, special emphasis is given to research on the hybrid grape varieties and their wines. One of only three United States Department of Agriculture quarantine facilities for the introduction and virus testing of grapes from outside the United States is located at the station.

The station's research and advisory programs have been instrumental in the revival of the state's grape and wine industry. Specific ongoing programs include: the Grape Importation and Certification Program (one of only three in the United States); the Vitis Gene Discovery Program, focusing on functional genomics and bioinformatics; the Commercial Fruit Crops Advisory Program and the Commercial Wine Advisory program.

Mid-America Viticulture and Enology Center: In addition to the State Fruit Experiment Station, SMSU–Mountain Grove houses the Mid-America Viticulture and Enology Center, a premier provider of grape and wine research. The center supports four major operations: a 5,000-gallon-capacity winery and distillery; a viticulture and enology training center; a wine analysis laboratory; and a cellar/sensory evaluation area. Activities include research concerning new and more disease-resistant grape varieties and working to develop innovative vinification techniques and value-added products such as fruit brandies and specialty wines.

The goal of MVEC's education program is to sustain the growth of the grape and wine industry by promoting a knowledgeable and skillful workforce. Training is offered by traditional and distance-learning methods to serve the needs of students in all situations.

Service is provided to the grape and wine industry to improve product quality and business profitability.

Harris–Stowe State College traces its origin back to 1857 when its first predecessor institution was founded by the St. Louis Board of Education as a normal school for the preparation of white elementary school teachers. It thus became the first public teacher education institution west of the Mississippi River and the 12th such institution in the United States. Its second predecessor institution was also a normal school founded by the same public schools in 1890 to prepare African-American elementary school teachers. Both normal schools later became four-year teachers colleges—Harris Teachers College and Stowe Teachers College. The former was named after William Torrey Harris, U.S. Commissioner of Education and former Superintendent of the St. Louis Public Schools. The latter was named after Harriet Beecher Stowe, the famed slavery abolistionist and author of Uncle Tom's Cabin. These two colleges merged in 1954, forming Harris–Stowe College. Later, in 1979, the college became a State of Missouri public college, with the name, Harris–Stowe State College.

In the early 1990's the College elected to become a "moderately selective" institution in its admission requirements and soon afterward won state approval to expand its institutional mission. Currently, the college offers baccalaureate degree programs in 12 applied professional disciplines in the fields of accounting, business administration, criminal justice, early childhood education, elementary education, health care management, hospitality/tourism management, information sciences & computer technology, middle school education, professional interdisciplinary studies, secondary education and urban specializations at all pre-higher education levels.

Through a generous land grant from the City of St. Louis, the college's campus has tripled in size, and through many major contributions from the State of Missouri, the corporate community, the college alumni, and many friends of the institution, Harris–Stowe is currently adding six new buildings to its expanded campus and making other major capital improvements—thereby establishing, for the first time in its long history of nearly a century and a half, a full campus including a quadrangle, a pedestrian mall, athletic fields, and an imposing campus entryway arch. The watchword of this growing college is "Excellence In All Endeavors, Through Teamwork!"

In June, 1990, the college's board of regents approved a change in the college mission to include an international emphasis in undergraduate education. This change is intended to help students prepare for the merging global environment. In 1995, the governor approved House Bill 442 directing the college to "develop such academic support programs and public service activities it deems necessary and appropriate to establish international or global education as a distinctive theme of its mission." An assessment of outcomes program is in effect to evaluate the effectiveness of that education.

Through the college's Institute of International Studies and other areas, international programs are being implemented to fulfill the new mission, such as student and faculty study abroad and exchange options, international lectures, themed semesters and symposia and internships abroad. Faculty are developing a global perspective throughout the curriculum. Foreign language offerings are being expanded, and students are encouraged to become proficient in a second language.

The following degrees are offered: bachelor of arts, bachelor of science, bachelor of science in business administration, bachelor of science in education, bachelor of general studies, associate of arts and associate of science. The college offers bachelor's degrees in 42 major areas in liberal arts, teacher education, business and technology. In addition to the four-year programs, the curriculum offers premedical, preengineering and other preprofessional programs and two-year associate degrees in dental hygiene, computer science, law enforcement, radiological technology, computer aided drafting and design, computer assisted manufacturing technology and respiratory therapy.

The college is organized into four schools: Arts and Sciences, Education, Business Administration and Technology. The college mission statement stresses a liberal arts-based core curriculum which is designed to provide every graduate with knowledge in the basic areas of learning. Under a revised and moderately selective admission policy, the college encourages high school students to be better prepared for college study by following the core curriculum requirements outlined by the Missouri Coordinating Board for Higher Education.

The administration of the college is vested in a six-member board of regents appointed by the governor with Senate consent.

The Department of Insurance regulates the insurance industry in Missouri and provides consumer protection to the insurance-buying public.

The agency was established in 1869, when 171 insurance companies operated in the state. The industry, as of December 2002, had grown to 1,838 insurance companies licensed in Missouri with 262 domiciled in the state. The department also has regulatory authority over 11,146 insurance agencies, 94,054 agents and 7,113 brokers, among other licensees.

The insurance industry in Missouri each year writes coverage with more than $18 billion in Missouri premiums and pays about $150 million in premium taxes and other fees to the state.

There are four divisions within the Department of Insurance: Financial Regulation, Market Regulation, Consumer Affairs and Resource Administration.

The Division of Financial Regulation conducts financial analysis and examinations of insurers domiciled in Missouri to verify their financial condition. The division also ensures that company operations comply with Missouri laws, regulations and accepted insurance accounting practices. Financial examinations for most Missouri-domiciled companies are conducted at least every three years.

The Division of Market Regulation regulates the performance of insurers in the marketplace. Market conduct examiners review insurers' operations, including marketing, claims handling, policies and rates. For some violations the insurance companies also are required to pay fines to the state school fund and/or restitution to the consumer, either through readjudication of claims or re-evaluation of the premium charged for the policy.

The life and health and property and casualty sections review policy contracts, rules and rate filings. The managed care section oversees policy development, implementation of new legislation and the analysis of statistical data from health maintenance organizations and entities. The statistics section analyzes and publishes industry and market data as well as trends in the overall industry.

The Division of Consumer Affairs assists the public in resolving complaints, providing information on insurance policies and investigating alleged insurance fraud. In 2002, the division responded to more than 5,716 complaints and 61,742 inquiries, recovering more than $10.3 million for consumers. The division operates a toll-free consumer hotline at 800-726-7390. The department also offers a workers compensation rate service on the Internet.

The Division of Resource Administration oversees licensing, budget, management information systems and support services.

The department is funded through fees collected from insurance companies, agents and other licensees rather than state general revenue.

The department's main office is located in Jefferson City with branch offices in Kansas City and St. Louis. The branch offices respond to consumer concerns in those areas. The Kansas City phone number is (816) 889-2381. The St. Louis phone number is (314) 340-6831. Consumers can file a complaint or inquiry electronically through the Internet site, which has a broad array of consumer and industry information available.

The Labor and Industrial Relations Commission is composed of three commissioners. Each commissioner is appointed a staggered six-year term by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. One member of the commission, a licensed Missouri attorney, represents the public. Another member represents the employer, while the remaining member represents the employee. The governor designates one of these members as chair.

The commission appoints a secretary to keep full and true records of all commission proceedings and copies of all rules, regulations, decisions and orders made by the commission.

The commission hears all appeals from all decisions and awards in workers' compensation, unemployment compensation, prevailing wage and victims of crime compensation cases at the highest administrative level. In connection with these appellate duties, the commission holds hearings and renders written opinions pursuant to the various provisions of Missouri law. These opinions, in turn, are subject to review by the Missouri Supreme Court and by courts of lesser jurisdiction.

In addition, the commission is charged with the statutory authority to approve or disapprove all rules or regulations promulgated by the divisions within the department.

The Labor and Industrial Relations Commission nominates and the governor appoints, with the advice and consent of the Senate, a director to be chief executive officer of the department.

Unemployment insurance programs in Missouri originated in the 1930s under federal guidelines.

The objective of the Division of Employment Security is to collect contributions from employers and pay unemployment benefits to individuals who are eligible under the law.

Costs for operating the division and the major part of its programs are paid from federal grants. The grants are derived from federal payroll taxes paid by employers and are made available by congressional appropriations. State unemployment contributions paid by Missouri employers are state funds set aside for the sole purpose of providing for the payment of weekly unemployment benefits to qualified claimants.

Unemployment Insurance

Unemployment Insurance programs provide partial protection against loss of wages for workers who become unemployed through no fault of their own. The unemployment benefits paid to insured workers help to boost the economy of the state during periods of economic downturn by helping maintain the level of consumer purchasing power.

Payment of benefits under the regular program is made from a trust fund. The program is supported by contributions from employers. No part of the contribution is deducted from worker wages.

Eligible claimants can qualify for up to 26 weeks of unemployment compensation under the Regular Benefit Program. During periods of high unemployment, the Extended Benefit Program provides up to 13 additional weeks of entitlement for the long-term unemployed who have exhausted all regular program entitlements and who meet extended benefit eligibility requirements. The Extended Benefit Program is financed equally by the state unemployment compensation trust fund and the U.S. Department of Labor.

Contributions

The division's contributions sections ensure that employers are properly classifying their workers, reporting their workers' wages and paying the correct contributions on wages. Correct reporting helps to ensure the prompt payment of unemployment benefits to insured workers during periods of unemployment.

Employers file quarterly contribution and wage reports with the division to report their workers' earnings.

Unemployment Benefits

One of the main objectives of the division is the prompt payment of unemployment benefits to eligible claimants.

With claims centers located in Jefferson City, St. Louis, Kansas City and Springfield, the Division of Employment Security has completed a transition from in-person to toll-free telephone initial unemployment insurance claim filing. Through the four centers, unemployed Missouri workers, including those who live out of state, can file initial and weekly claims by phone. In addition, the division offers filing of unemployment claims via the Internet as an additional option. The Internet address is www.ui.dolir.state.mo.us.

A person must have worked in employment covered under the Missouri Employment Security Law and earned qualifying wages in order to be entitled to any unemployment benefits.

COLLEEN BAKER
Director
Division of Labor Standards

Detailed wage records are kept on every worker reported by employers on the quarterly contribution and wage reports. The wage records permit the prompt determination of benefit entitlement when an initial unemployment claim is filed.

Other unemployment insurance services include offering claim filing services to unemployed workers living in other U.S. states or territories; detecting and preventing improper payments; and paying a percentage of weekly unemployment benefits to employees of participating employers in exchange for reducing work hours and avoiding layoffs.

Appeals

The Missouri Employment Security Law provides for the appeal of determinations concerning receipt of unemployment insurance benefits and tax liability of employers. In addition to appeals concerning tax liability of employers and payment of unemployment insurance benefits, the section also receives appeals regarding the withholding of child support, appeals under the Trade Adjustment Assistance program and other federal programs.

The Reorganization Act of 1974 created the Division of Labor Standards by combining the Divisions of Industrial Inspection, Mine Inspection and Prevailing Wage.

The division currently consists of three sections: Wage and Hour, On-Site Safety and Health Consultation Service and Mine and Cave Safety and Health.

The division director administers these programs and handles receipts and expenditures of all funds; collection of fees; issuance of child labor work permits; assistance to the public relating to wages, hours and dismissal and minimum wage rights; assistance with voluntary compliance of child labor, prevailing wage, safety and health laws and enforcement of those laws where authorized and necessary; workplace safety and health training, on-site consultations and programs; and program's reports and statistics.

Wage and Hour

The section provides assistance to the public by answering questions about wages, hours, dismissal rights and minimum wage issues (Chapter 290, RSMo). Working together with employers, school officials, parents and public interest groups, the division is able to educate individuals involved with employing youth. Also, the section assists employers in understanding and meeting their responsibilities under Missouri's Child Labor Law. They issue work permits for youth employed in the entertainment industry (Chapter 294, RSMo). When necessary, the section investigates and enforces compliance with Missouri's Child Labor Law. The division's increased outreach and education efforts with public bodies, contractors, workers and their representatives assist with encouraging increased participation in the prevailing wage survey process. The division helps public bodies and contractors with attaining voluntary compliance with Missouri's Prevailing Wage Law (Chapter 290, RSMo).

Wages, Hours, Dismissal Rights and Minimum Wage

The division answers questions for the public about issues such as breaks, lunches, vacations, hiring, wage levels, dismissals, discipline and others. Employers and employees are provided information on their workplace rights and responsibilities. Assistance is provided by giving proper procedures or referrals to other agencies with more authority. While the division has no wage collection authority, procedures are provided for those individuals seeking such assistance.

Child Labor

The division is responsible for the administration and enforcement of Missouri's Child Labor Law. The law ensures that no child younger than 16 years of age is employed in an occupation that is detrimental to the child's safety, health, morals, educational processes or general well being. No child under the age of 14 may work in any occupation, unless specifically allowed. The exception is entertainment industry employment. The law restricts work hours for youth under 16. A child 14 or 15 may not be employed during the regular school term unless the public school superintendent or designee of the district where the youth lives has issued a work certificate. Youth under 16 may work in the entertainment industry if the division issues the youth a work permit.

Prevailing Wage

The Wage and Hour Section is responsible for compiling wage surveys, wage inspections, issuing the General Wage Order for the Highway and Transportation Commission and the Annual Wage Order. The section also is responsible for providing information to the Labor and Industrial Relations Commission regarding objections to those orders.

Prevailing wage survey information for construction projects is collected on an ongoing basis. The survey information is used to determine the prevailing wage rates for workers employed on public works construction projects. Outreach with contractors, public bodies, employees and others occur daily to assist in achieving voluntary compliance. Site inspections are performed to assure compliance with prevailing wage rates and to investigate complaints.

On-Site Safety and Health Consultation Service

The service provides a confidential, no charge service to employers with up to 250 workers (or up to 500 nationwide). The service assists employers in reducing injuries and illnesses without penalties, thereby providing safer and healthier workplaces. Also, employers gain a better understanding of how to comply with federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations. At an employer's request, trained occupational safety and health consultants visit the workplace. The consultant informs the employer of problems found and recommends solutions to eliminate hazards.

Safety and Health Achievement Recognition Program (SHARP)

Employers who eliminate all identified safety and health problems and have, or are willing to start, comprehensive safety and health program management are eligible for an exemption from routine OSHA inspections. The Safety and Health Achievement Recognition Program (SHARP), recognizes the top level of employer participation in the program. It allows for the exemption from routine OSHA inspection for one year. There are currently 24 Missouri employers exempt from routine OSHA inspection.

Mine and Cave Safety and Health

The Mine and Cave Safety and Health Section consists of two programs to aid miners, mine owners/operators and cave owner/operators.

Mine and Cave Inspection Program

The inspection program is mandated by Chapter 293, RSMo to inspect mines to ensure safety in the workplace. Each fiscal year, the Mine and Cave Inspection Program conducts safety and health inspections of mines and caves regulated by Chapter 293, RSMo. Underground mines are inspected four times per year and surface mines are inspected twice per year. There is an inspection fee based on the tonnage reported by the mine owner. This program includes consultation services. Mine and cave safety inspectors assist miners with mine openings, closings, safety programs, dust and noise control and compliance with federal Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) standards. The program also assists with coordinating mine and cave rescue efforts.

Caves

All show caves, by law, must be inspected before opened to the public. The act also requires every cave owner, operator or agent to provide necessary safety guard rails, bridges, ladders, entrances, platforms, walkways, safety barriers, rails, paths, electrical and other safety measures. The safety measures must be in place before opening to the public. Cave maps must be on file before caves are ready for public use. Caves are inspected prior to opening and once after opening to the public. A fee of $35 is assessed to the cave owner. A listing of the caves inspected by the program is published on the department's website.

Mine Safety and Training Program

The Mine Safety and Health Training Program provides training services to mines which include safety and health, first aid, cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) and mine rescue. Training is available at no charge. The program provides safety and health training to miners through a federal grant. This program is funded primarily by the Mine Safety and Health Administration. Recipients of these services have reduced accidents and injuries in their workplaces with reduced number of lost workdays.

On Nov. 2, 1926, the Missouri Workers' Compensation Law was adopted by a vote of the people. The Labor and Industrial Relations Commission, and more recently the Division of Workers' Compensation, have been entrusted with the administration of Missouri's Workers' Compensation Law. The division's primary function is to provide prompt and equitable resolutions of all cases of work-related injuries and occupational diseases with a minimum of formal litigation.

Under the Missouri Workers' Compensation Law an individual who is injured on the job may be entitled to compensation in the form of medical benefits as well as potential temporary total disability, permanent partial disability benefits or permanent total disability. An employee is entitled to these disability compensation benefits in an amount equal to two-thirds of the employee's average weekly wage pay not to exceed certain statutory limitations. The average weekly pay is determined by examining various pay periods immediately preceding the date of injury.

The division's organizational structure is made up of the adjudication offices responsible for the adjudication of disputes, and the administrative components including the Injury Processing Section, Regulatory Section, and the Administration Section. The Administration Section includes the Legal Unit. The Regulatory Section includes the special programs listed below. The division also administers the Fraud and Noncompliance Unit, Crime Victims' Compensation Program and the Tort Victims' Compensation Program.

The division's administrative costs are paid from the Workers' Compensation Administrative Fund. Employers finance the fund by paying an annual tax of up to two percent on net workers' compensation insurance premiums.

Adjudication

The division has 47 administrative law judges and legal advisors. The adjudication staff holds dockets, including hearing, that are designed to resolve disputes between injured workers and employers/insurance companies. The division has eight local offices around the state. The adjudication staff also holds dockets at 36 other sites either in the county where the injury occurred or an adjacent county.

Injury Processing

The injury processing section receives and processes all information relating to the approximately 154,300 work-related injuries that occur each year in Missouri. The division receives reports on injury, claims for compensation, answers, temporary benefits paid, medical costs paid and other information regarding work-related injuries. This information is used by the sections and programs in carrying out all division functions.

Self-Insurance

Section 287.280, RSMo, and 8 CSR 50.3.010, provide for self-insurance as an alternative to traditional workers' compensation coverage. Larger employers may apply to self-insure individually. Mid-size to smaller employers may find group trusts a viable alternative. Individual employers and group trusts must satisfy the division's requirements for financial soundness, administrative ability and post surety bonds or escrow accounts.

The Missouri Private Sector Individual Insurers Guaranty Corporation was established in 1992. The Guaranty Corporation was established to administer workers' compensation cases for companies who become insolvent. The corporation collects assessments from the individual self-insurers to ensure funds are available to administer the claims of insolvent self-insureds.

Second Injury Fund

In 1943, the Workers' Compensation Law was amended to benefit the physically handicapped and individuals with a previous workplace-related disability. An employer's liability is limited to the current injury. The Second Injury Fund is liable when an employee is injured, and the combined effect of the current injury and prior disability results in permanent total disability.

Liability for the Second Injury Fund was expanded in 1955 to include any permanent partial disability, compounded by a subsequent injury, without restriction as to type or extent. The fund also pays medical and death benefits for injuries incurred by employees of an employer who is uninsured. Under certain conditions lost wages from a second job may be paid from the fund.

Dispute Management

In January 1995, the division implemented its Dispute Management Program as an alternative dispute resolution process to mediate disputes that arise soon after a workplace injury occurs. The division has mediators who assist parties in resolving medical treatment and lost wage disputes. This is a voluntary process and both parties must agree to mediate. When one of the parties does not agree to mediate, the case is referred to the local workers' compensation office for further proceedings. Parties successfully resolve the majority of issues with mediator assistance. This system of early intervention has been highly effective in facilitating communications between the injured employee, the employer and insurance company.

Medical Services

This unit manages several special programs. The programs include medical fee dispute claims resolution, physical rehabilitation and vocational rehabilitation. Consultation with division administration is provided on medical issues and for injured agency personnel.

Medical Fee Disputes

The unit's goal is to facilitate the resolution of medical fee dispute claims arising between health care providers and employers/insurers. Disputes arise when the healthcare provider is authorized by the employer to provide medical treatment but has not received payment or only partial payment. The division encourages informal resolution of these disputed claims. If this is unsuccessful, the division provides mediation or an evidentiary hearing, if necessary, to resolve the disputed claims.

Physical Rehabilitation

The division's Physical Rehabilitation Unit determines if the employee's injury qualifies for a $40 per week physical rehabilitation benefit. The benefit is paid from the Second Injury Fund. The injured employee must obtain therapy in a division-certified facility. The physical rehabilitation benefit is paid for a maximum of 20 weeks. In unusual cases, the employee may qualify for a special order extending benefits if more treatment is needed.

Certification of physical rehabilitation facilities is another responsibility of the unit. Certified facilities must meet function, personnel, equipment, quality and adequacy standards as defined by the division.

Vocational Rehabilitation

The Vocational Rehabilitation Program is voluntary. Employers may use the service to provide job retraining to severely injured employees. To conserve state resources and reduce duplication of services, an interagency agreement has been entered into with the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education and the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation to provide this service.

Workers' Safety Program

The Missouri Workers' Safety Program is responsible for the administration of Section 287.123, RSMo. The program was established by statute in 1992 and its mission was revised in 1993. The law requires all insurance carriers writing workers' compensation insurance in Missouri to provide comprehensive safety engineering and management services to employers.

Program functions include certifying and maintaining a registry of safety consultants and engineers; certifying safety programs of self-insured employers, third-party administrators and workers' compensation insurance carriers; investigating complaints against insurance carriers; monitoring the impact of safety services being provided by insurance carriers; performing on-site safety audits; conducting occupational safety education and training; and analyzing injury and illness data provided by carriers.

Fraud and Noncompliance

The Fraud and Noncompliance Unit was established by legislation enacted in 1993. The unit is charged with conducting confidential investigations of all allegations of fraud and noncompliance. Noncompliance means employers who are not properly insuring their workers' compensation liability. Fraud in the workers' compensation system may occur at any level involving employees, employers, insurance carriers, attorneys, physicians and others who attempt to obtain or deny workers' compensation benefits in a fraudulent manner.

The unit staff participates in educational seminars and fraud detection training to inform the public, including employer and employee organizations, civic organizations, insurance companies, legal associations and other groups about proper compliance with the workers' compensation law.

The unit has a toll-free number (800) 592-6003 for more information.

Crime Victims' Compensation

The division is responsible for the administration of the Missouri Crime Victims' Compensation Program (Chapter 595, RSMo and 8 CSR 50-6.010). The legislation was enacted to assist victims of violent crimes who have suffered physical injury as a direct result of a crime, and to assist dependents in the case of the death of the victim.

Benefits are limited to a total of $25,000 payable for medical costs, counseling, lost wages, funeral expenses and other miscellaneous expenses incurred by or on behalf of the victim.

The law's fundamental purpose is to assist violent crime victims through a period of financial hardship. The Crime Victims' Compensation Fund is not a primary payer, but rather a public, quasi-charitable fund. The fund is financed by fees, fines and restitution paid by offenders. Funding and judgments are calculated on a graduated scale depending on the seriousness of the offense.

To be eligible for compensation, the claimant must report the crime and cooperate with law enforcement authorities, suffer a compensable loss, and meet other eligibility requirements. The division's administrative law judges resolve any disputes about eligibility.

The program has a toll-free number (800) 347-6881 for more information.

The Governor's Council on Disability serves as the voice and advocate for 949,000 Missourians with disabilities in state policy making. The council works to make persons with disabilities aware of their rights and opportunities; increase employment opportunities for job seekers with disabilities; expand access to equal and full participation for all individuals with disabilities in their communities at the local, state and federal levels; and change the delivery system for assistive technology devices and services.

ROB HONAN
Director, Governor's
Council on Disability

In 1947, President Harry S Truman issued an executive order establishing the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped. This federal agency was created to assist disabled World War II veterans with re-entry into the civilian workforce. Following President Truman's lead, Missouri established the Governor's Committee in 1949 after it became obvious that a local network was needed to disseminate information about work-related problems facing people with disabilities.

In 1988, the names of both the President's Committee and the Governor's Committee were changed to Committees on Employment of People with Disabilities, placing the appropriate emphasis on the individual workers and not their impairments.

The mission of the council has naturally evolved from strictly promoting employment to addressing all of the barriers to employment and full participation in community life. To more accurately reflect the mission, the 1994 General Assembly renamed this agency, Governor's Council on Disability. During fiscal year 1995, three programs–Governor's Council on Disability, Missouri Assistive Technology and the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) state government compliance program–were joined to better serve the needs of Missourians with disabilities.

Organization

The Governor's Council on Disability consists of 21 council members, including the chair and one member from each state congressional district, as well as the executive director. The majority of the council is comprised of people with disabilities representing various disability groups. Family members of people with disabilities, persons who represent other disability-related groups and other advocates fill the remaining positions.

The governor appoints the chair with the advice and consent of the Senate. The governor also appoints the 21 members-at-large. The council meets at least quarterly to act as an advisory body to its staff and to discuss and suggest ways to address current issues affecting persons with disabilities in Missouri.

The council's staff operates out of three offices: Jefferson City, Kansas City and St. Louis.

In the administration of its duties, the Governor's Council on Disability also offers assistance to help the various departments, divisions and branches of government to comply with all laws regarding persons with disabilities. To further that goal, the director of each state department designates at least one employee to act as a liaison with the council. The assistance offered includes educational programming and consultation on the rights of persons with disabilities.

A second board provides direction for assistive technology issues to Missouri Assistive Technology. It was established by state statute in 1993 with a mission of increasing access to assistive technology for all Missourians with disabilities. Council members for the project include 12 consumers, two state legislators, two non-designated agency or organization representatives and seven designated agency representatives who are the primary funding sources for assistive technology (Vocational Rehabilitation, Rehabilitation Services for the Blind, Special Education, Medicaid, Mental Health, Health and Insurance).

The staff is based in Independence. It accomplishes its mission through systems change, capacity building, training, resource development, individual advocacy and support.

Missouri Assistive Technology works cooperatively with agencies on the national, state and local levels to improve public policies and expand program options for individuals with disabilities.

Missouri Commission on Human Rights

The mission of the Missouri Commission on Human Rights is to develop, recommend and implement ways to prevent and eliminate discrimination and to provide equitable and timely resolutions of discrimination claims through enforcement of the Missouri Human Rights Act. In addition, the commission provides equitable and timely resolutions of discrimination claims through enforcement of the Missouri Human Rights Act; and to devise, recommend and implement ways to prevent and eliminate discrimination.

The commission responds to complaints of alleged discrimination in employment, housing and public accommodations based on race, color, religion, national origin, ancestry, sex, physical/mental disability handicap, age (40-70 employment only) and familial status (housing only). Chapter 213, RSMo 1992 (Missouri Human Rights Act) requires the Missouri Commission on Human Rights to receive, investigate, settle or conciliate complaints of alleged discrimination and conduct public hearings. The statute also enables the commission to certify local commissions, establish relationships with federal and local civil and human rights agencies, implement educational or research programs and develop ways to prevent discrimination.

There are several federal civil rights agencies and approximately 11 local human rights agencies in Missouri. These agencies handle many complaints that otherwise would fall within the commission's responsibility. By establishing work-sharing relationships with federal and local agencies, the commission has eliminated duplication between many government civil rights agencies in Missouri. This has proven beneficial in the use of state resources.

Commission members are nominated by the director of the Department of Labor and Industrial Relations, appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. The governor appoints at least one member from each of Missouri's nine congressional districts, one member-at-large and one member as chairperson. The commissioners serve for six years without compensation.

Complaint and Enforcement

Any person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful discriminatory practice may file a written complaint with the Missouri Commission on Human Rights within 180 days from the date of the last act of alleged discrimination. After the filing of any complaint, the executive director, with the assistance of the commission's staff, makes a prompt investigation. If the director determines that probable cause exists for crediting the allegations of the complaint, the director tries to eliminate the unlawful employment practice by conference, conciliation and persuasion.

In cases of failure to eliminate the discriminatory practice by conciliation, the chairperson of the commission may order a public hearing. The Office of the Attorney General presents the complaint at the hearing. (In housing cases only, the parties have the right to make a decision whether to have their case decided at a public hearing or in circuit court). Employment discrimination cases continue to consume the largest portion of the commission's workload.

The objective of the hearing process is to make a finding of fact, determine conclusions of law and determine if the respondent has committed an unlawful discriminatory practice. If the commission finds that an unlawful discriminatory practice has occurred, it may order the respondent to stop the unlawful act and to take affirmative steps, as the commission deems appropriate, which includes civil penalties. If the commission finds in favor of the respondent, after hearing all the evidence, the complaint is dismissed.

Either party has the right to appeal the commission's order to the circuit court. If no proceeding for review is instituted, the commission may obtain a court order for enforcement of its decision. If an appeal to the court is made, the attorney general becomes counsel for the Missouri Commission on Human Rights in the court proceeding. A case may be appealed through the Missouri courts up to the State Supreme Court.

The State Board of Mediation is a quasi-judicial board created by an act of the General Assembly in 1947 through the enactment of Chapter 295, RSMo.

This five-member board is appointed by the governor. Two members are employers of labor or selected from an association representing employers of labor. The other two members hold membership in a bona fide trade or labor union. The fifth member is a neutral party who serves as full-time chairman and administrator of the agency.

The board has been statutorily charged since 1967 with the responsibility of determining an appropriate bargaining unit of public employees, based on their community of interests. It also conducts secret ballot elections to determine majority status.

The law provides that public bodies or their designated representatives shall meet, confer and discuss proposals relative to conditions of employment with the labor or employee organization, which is the exclusive bargaining representative.

In 1965, the Missouri Legislature enacted Chapter 105, RSMo, the Public Sector Labor Law. The law was amended in 1967 and 1969. Currently, the law covers all public employees in Missouri except police, deputy sheriffs, Missouri highway patrol officers, Missouri National Guard and all teachers at Missouri schools, colleges and universities. Under Missouri statute and case law, public employees have the right to join a union; however, they have no right to strike or to enforce any agreement that they may reach with the public employer.

JAY L. SCHULTEHENRICH
Employer Member
State Board of Mediation

The board has no authority to process unfair labor practices. An appeal from a decision of the board may be taken to the circuit court. The administrative rules for processing a petition were promulgated in 1976 and can be found at 8 CSR 40-1.010 to 40-2.180.

The board was originally established to mediate labor disputes occurring in public utilities. In addition, the board aided the utility employer and its union employees in their collective bargaining negotiations so that labor disputes in public utilities could be peacefully settled without strikes or lockouts. Provisions of Section 295.180, RSMo were to be held in conflict with federal law and, to that extent, invalid under the supremacy clause of the U.S. Constitution.

Though its functions date back to 1847, the Missouri Department of Mental Health was first established as a cabinet-level state agency by the Omnibus State Government Reorganization Act, effective July 1, 1974.

State law provides three principal missions for the department: (1) the prevention of mental disorders, developmental disabilities and substance abuse; (2) the treatment, habilitation and rehabilitation of Missourians with those conditions; and (3) the improvement of public understanding and attitudes about mental disorders, developmental disabilities and substance abuse.

The vision of the Department of Mental Health is one of "Lives Beyond Limitations." The vision is that Missourians shall be free to live their lives and pursue their dreams beyond the limitations of mental illness, developmental disabilities, alcohol and other drug abuse.

Missourians must know that mental illness is a treatable disease, persons with substance abuse problems can triumph over their addictions, and persons with developmental disabilities can be productive citizens and good neighbors in their communities.

Mental Health Commission

The commission, composed of seven members, appoints the director of the Department of Mental Health with confirmation of the Senate. Commissioners are appointed to four-year terms by the governor, again with the confirmation of the Senate. The commissioners serve as policy advisers to the department director.

The commission, by law, must include an advocate of community mental health services, a physician who is an expert in the treatment of mental illness, a physician concerned with developmental disabilities, a member with business expertise, an advocate of substance abuse treatment, a citizen who represents the interests of consumers of psychiatric services and a citizen who represents the interests of consumers of developmental disabilities services.

Office of the Director

With advice from the Mental Health Commis-sion, the director is responsible for overall operations of the department, its three operating divisions, five support offices, 28 facilities and central office. The director's duties include planning, supervising and evaluating the provision of services for Missourians with mental disorders, developmental disabilities and substance abuse.

Each year the department provides services to more than 100,000 Missourians through the Division of Comprehensive Psychiatric Services, the Division of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities and the Division of Alcohol and Drug Abuse.

The Office of Administration, headed by the department's deputy director for administration, provides a range of administrative and financial services to help the department achieve effective results. Services provided by the Office of Administration can be divided into the following areas: fiscal management accounts for all funds, manages expenditures, and produces fiscal summaries, analyses, and reports; capital improvements and general services provide technical assistance on construction, maintenance and repair for 28 state-owned facilities, and coordinates leases; contracts and procurement manages more than 4,000 contracts with private agencies or individuals to provide services in the community; reimbursements collects payments from private insurance, Medicaid and Medicare, and private pay for department services and coordinates revenue maximization proposals; budget services develops and monitors the annual operating and leasing budgets and oversees spending plans; and dietetic services manages national school lunch and commodity programs and provides technical assistance in food management and nutrition in department facilities.

The Office of Consumer Affairs provides consumer and family views in policy making, aids in accessing services and ensures that client rights are protected.

The Office of Quality Management is currently responsible for a myriad of department-wide and statewide functions in support of the Department Director's Office, the three clinical divisions and the other department support offices. These functions serve to coordinate and implement quality processes to enhance division services to consumers through the following mechanisms:

- Survey, licensure and certification of facilities and treatment programs, including technical assistance;
- Technical assistance to, and staff support of, major federal and state initiatives such as HIPAA compliance and Nursing Home Reform;
- Internal and external audit services, related to compliance, financial, and performance reviews;
- Abuse and neglect investigations and associated technical assistance for local investigations;
- Direction and coordination of CQI and outcomes evaluation processes, including annual customer satisfaction survey, web based reporting of results and other DMH outcome/performance based data collection and reporting;
- Appeals and hearings for administrative due process;
- Coordination of the department's regulatory and records management processes;
- Department-wide HIPAA (Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act) privacy administration and coordination;
- Medical/clinical quality assurance and health care policy consultation to the department's management and facility operations;
- Coordination of the department's strategic planning process.

The Office of Human Resources (OHR) coordinates department-wide personnel, labor relations, and other related functions including collective bargaining and union contract administration; compensation management; personnel policy development, implementation and interpretation; grievance administration; employee data collection and analysis; compliance with state and federal rules, regulations and statutes; and, consultation to local facility human resources offices. The OHR also maintains the department's employment disqualification list and processes employee background screenings. In addition, the OHR provides administrative support in personnel and human resources for the department's central office including recruitment, compensation, timekeeping, recordkeeping, and other employment processing activities and advises department management on policy decisions.

The Office of Information Systems is responsible for identifying, implementing, and maintaining information and communication systems that improve the effectiveness of the Department of Mental Health.

The Office of Public Affairs is responsible for coordinating the department's public education efforts regarding mental health issues. Office staff develops and disseminates informational materials and helps to keep providers, consumers and the public informed of mental health programs, services and issues. The office also provides informational updates, support services, technical assistance and communications training to staff in the department's divisions, offices and facilities.

Division of Alcohol and Drug Abuse

The Division of Alcohol and Drug Abuse was established within the Department of Mental Health in 1975, and became a statutory entity in 1980 with the passage of the Omnibus Mental Health Act.

The division is responsible for assuring that treatment and prevention services are accessible to persons with substance abuse and gambling disorders, and to those at risk for such disorders. In Missouri, over 378,000 adults and 114,000 adolescents need some form of intervention for alcohol and other drug abuse. They cost the state's economy an estimated $6.9 billion a year. Studies have shown that every dollar spent on substance abuse treatment saves $12 in state and federal expenditures due to lost productivity, crime, traffic accidents, medical care, and other social costs.

The division meets its responsibilities for comprehensive treatment and prevention services through a network of contracted community-based providers and state-operated facilities. The division's administrative responsibilities include management of state and federal funds for substance abuse treatment and prevention services, contract monitoring, technical assistance and training, development of standards of care, research, dissemination of public information, clinical utilization review, management of the Substance Abuse Traffic Offender Program (SATOP), and oversight of Comprehensive Substance Abuse Treatment and Rehabilitation (CSTAR), the state's Medicaid program for substance abuse treatment for adolescents, pregnant women, women with children, and other adults.

Division of Comprehensive Psychiatric Services

The Division of Comprehensive Psychiatric Services provides inpatient and residential services for children and adults at eleven (11) state-operated facilities. These include four long-term care facilities, three acute care hospitals, one facility with both acute and long-term services, one sexual offender treatment center, one children's psychiatric hospital, and one children's residential treatment center.

MICHAEL COUTY
Director, Division of Alcohol & Drug Abuse

In addition, the division contracts with not-for-profit community mental health centers to provide services for persons with mental illness in each of 25 geographic service areas. The agency responsible for service provision in each service area is designated as the division's administrative agent. The administrative agents are responsible for assessment and service delivery to eligible individuals in their geographic service area. This includes responsibility to provide follow-up services to persons who have been discharged from state-operated inpatient services. Children and their families are also served by administrative agents.

Supported community living programs are provided to individuals with mental illness who require financial subsidies to support their housing needs or need more structured services to live in the community. Living arrangements in this program range from nursing homes to apartments and other settings that are integrated into the community. Persons in these programs are provided support through case management and community psychiatric rehabilitation program services provided by administrative agents.

During fiscal year 2002, the division provided:

- inpatient services to 7,763 adults and 811 children;
- outpatient and community support to 50,134 adults and 12,438 children; and
- supported community living services to 7,103 adults and 397 children.

The State Advisory Council for Comprehensive Psychiatric Services

The State Advisory Council for Comprehensive Psychiatric Services was first established in 1977 by the governor's executive order. Members are appointed by the director of the Division of Comprehensive Psychiatric Services. The council is comprised of 25 members who advise and make recommendations on the development and coordination of a statewide inter-agency/inter-departmental system of care for children/youth with serious emotional disorders and persons with mental illness and their families. Through public education and advocacy efforts consumers of mental health services and their families have become an integral part of defining priorities for the division on issues surrounding accessible services, crisis intervention, children's services, recovery and budget. The council works with other mental health advocacy groups in planning and coordinating Mental Health Awareness Day, an event that brings together consumers, family members, mental health professionals and advocates throughout the state where they participate at the Capitol in educational seminars, media awards, and a rally to promote advocacy.

Fulton State Hospital, authorized in 1847 and opened in 1851, is the oldest public mental health facility west of the Mississippi River. The 505-bed hospital provides inpatient adult psychiatric services, including long-term care, for a 31-county area in the state's northeast quadrant.

The hospital has been accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations since 1984. It has 21 beds certified for federal Medicaid or Medicare reimbursement.

The 64-bed Adult Psychiatric Center offers psychosocial rehabilitation services for long-term care patients. The hospital also operates a 24-bed group home complex on its grounds.

Fulton has Missouri's only maximum-security and intermediate-security settings for persons committed by the circuit courts for psychiatric treatment. The 216-bed Biggs Forensic Center provides treatment for those committed as not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect (NGRI) as well as pre-trial evaluations for those who require a maximum security setting. Also in Biggs is a cooperative treatment program with the Department of Corrections (DOC) providing acute mental health care for inmates from DOC. The 175-bed Guhleman Forensic Center offers an intermediate security environment that allows former Biggs patients to progress toward increased liberty and responsibility.

The hospital has a training affiliation with the University of Missouri School of Medicine's Psychiatry Department. The hospital provides clinical experience to various student programs, including students from surrounding schools of nursing, social work programs, occupational therapy programs, and psychology training programs.

Southeast Missouri Mental Health Center began in 1903 as Farmington State Hospital. In 1984, the Missouri General Assembly approved the conversion of most of the hospital into a medium-security prison, operated by the Department of Corrections. Subsequently in 1987, the state hospital was converted into a mental health center and moved into buildings adjacent to the prison.

The 208-bed psychiatric center provides acute and intermediate treatment for a 31-county catchment area, and maintains a 90-bed minimum/campus-security, forensic unit for patients referred by the criminal courts for psychiatric evaluation and/or treatment.

By cooperative agreement with the Department of Corrections and Mental Health, the Corrections Treatment Center (CTC) was established and operates on the grounds of Farmington Correctional Center. Within this unit, the mental health center staffs a small medium-security ward for inmates with psychiatric needs, and provides psychiatric coverage, case management and medication services for a 200-bed social rehabilitation unit.

Client placement and monitoring services are provided through the Supportive Community Living Program located on grounds, and outpatient services for an eight-county area of southeast Missouri are provided through the Administrative Agent contracted by the Department of Mental Health.

In December, 1997, Southwest Missouri Psychiatric Rehabilitation Center (SWMPRC) formerly Southwest Missouri Mental Health Center, moved into a new facility in El Dorado Springs from its previous location in Nevada. The 30-bed, adult psychiatric treatment facility provides both acute and long-term care for Service Area 8, and long-term backup care for Service Area 9 and 10. The three Service Areas are located in the CPS Southwest Region, consisting of 21 counties in Southwest Missouri.

The Administrative Agents are the entry and exit points for all DMH funded psychiatric services in the Southwest Region. Each Administrative Agent manages admissions to assigned beds at Southwest Missouri Psychiatric Rehabilitation Center based upon percentage of population. The facility accepts those persons in need of treatment for serious mental illness and mental disorders. The staff of the facility provides intensive psychosocial rehabilitation treatment, which facilitates a return to living in the community. Administrative Agent staff are involved with the treatment process and discharge planning by attending a monthly patient review meeting at the facility. Housing Support Services are also provided to clients residing in the Regional Supported Housing Program located in Nevada and El Dorado Springs.

Following discharge, community-based care and treatment is provided by staff of the Administrative Agents through the POS Program, the decentralized community placement program, and the Medicaid-funded targeted case management and CPRC programs. Treatment services are monitored by the staff of the Southwest Regional Supported Community Living Program, located in Nevada.

The Missouri Sexual Offender Treatment Center provides appropriate treatment, care, security and custody for those persons adjudicated as sexually violent predators. With the passage of the Sexually Violent Predator law, which was effective January 1, 1999, the Missouri General Assembly mandated that those individuals adjudicated by the court as "sexually violent predators" be committed indefinitely to the custody of the Director of the Department of Mental Health for "control, care and treatment until such time…that the person is safe to be at large." In order for such commitments to pass constitutional scrutiny, the department provides care and treatment that is consistent with existing professional standards and practice. The law also requires that individuals committed for treatment as sexually violent predators be kept in a security facility and housed separately from Department of Corrections inmates and from persons served by the Department of Mental Health who have not been found to be sexually violent predators.

The location and treatment of sexually violent predators is on the campus shared by Missouri Sexual Offender Treatment Center, Southeast Missouri Mental Health Center, and Farmington Correctional Center, in Farmington. Currently in the facility there are 39 individuals committed for treatment, with 31 individuals detained who are in the commitment review process. Projections suggest that 17-25 individuals will be referred to the program for detention and evaluation each year. It is anticipated for the initial years of operation, the commitments to the center will greatly exceed court ordered releases.

In addition to the treatment and custody of sexually violent predators, the department is required to provide staff to participate in the multidisciplinary team to assist the Prosecutor's Review Committee in determining whether an individual may meet the definition of a sexually violent predator. Further, the department is required to evaluate each individual for whom the court finds probable cause to believe the person is a sexually violent predator. Finally, the department must annually provide the committing court an annual report regarding the committed person's mental condition.

Division of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities

The Division of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, established in 1974, serves a population that has developmental disabilities such as mental retardation, cerebral palsy, head injury, autism, epilepsy and certain learning disabilities. Such conditions must have occurred before age 22 and are likely to continue indefinitely. To be eligible for services from the division, persons with these disabilities must be substantially limited in their ability to function independently.

The division improves the lives of persons with developmental disabilities through supports and services to enable those persons to live independently and productively. In 1988, the division began participation in the Medicaid Home and Community Based Waiver program, designed to help expand needed services throughout the state.

The division operates 17 facilities that provide or purchase specialized services. The 11 regional centers form the framework for the system and are backed by six habilitation centers that provide residential care and habilitation services for more severely disabled persons.

The regional centers, the primary points of entry into the system, provide assessment and case management services that include coordination of each eligible person's individualized plan.

Referrals may be made by a regional center to a habilitation center. Habilitation centers primarily serve persons who are severely disabled, behaviorally disordered, court-committed or medically fragile. All habilitation centers are Medicaid certified.

State and Regional Planning and Advisory Councils

The division receives consumer advice and planning assistance from the Missouri Planning Council for Developmental Disabilities and 11 regional councils. The regional council's members are drawn from areas served by the regional centers.

The Missouri Planning Council for Developmental Disabilities was created in 1971 under federal legislation. The council also serves, under Missouri statute, as the State Advisory Council on Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, providing advice to the division director and other state agencies that serve persons with developmental disabilities.

Missouri Planning Council members are appointed by the governor. The council develops and implements a state plan addressing systems change for Missourians with developmental disabilities.

The Department of Natural Resources preserves, protects and enhances Missouri's natural, cultural and energy resources and works to inspire their enjoyment and responsible use for present and future generations. Our staff work to ensure that our state enjoys clean air to breathe, clean water for drinking and recreation and land that sustains a diversity of life.

We take seriously our responsibility of stewardship to protect and enhance the environment in which we work and live, and our responsibility to support our state's economy. To do this, we value integrity above all, openness to all individuals and points of view, diversity in people and approach, excellence in all we do and service.

Several offices enable the department to carry out its responsibilities: the Water Protection and Soil Conservation Division; the Air and Land Protection Division; the Division of State Parks; the Outreach and Assistance Center; the Geological Survey and Resource Assessment Division; and the Division of Administrative Support. In addition, the State Environmental Improvement and Energy Resources Authority, the Petroleum Storage Tank Insurance Fund and the Missouri Lewis and Clark Bicentennial Commission are administratively attached to the department through the Office of the Director.

Office of the Director

The Office of the Director provides departmental focus on policies and outcomes and works to ensure that the decisions that are made result in environmental improvements.

The Office of the Director seeks to improve efficiency of departmental actions, drive customer-focused initiatives, ensure public participation in decision-making, and attain results affecting the quality of our water, air, land, energy, recreational and cultural resources. It seeks to continue the protection and enhancement of our natural and cultural resources through collaborative, participatory approaches.

The Office of the Director coordinates interagency and intra-agency cooperative agreements, helps develop and direct specific strategies and represents the state in statutory roles. The office also provides information and assistance to state and national legislative bodies and oversees issues of state and national import.

The director of the Department of Natural Resources manages Missouri's natural, cultural and energy resources. The director serves as the state historic preservation officer and as chair of the State Inter-agency Council for Outdoor Recreation and the Energy Policy Council. He also serves as a member of the Soil and Water Districts Commission, the Petroleum Storage Tank Insurance Fund Board of Trustees and the Unmarked Human Burial Consultation Committee. The department director represents Missouri on three interstate river organizations: Missouri River Basin Commission, Arkansas-White-Red Basins Inter-agency Committee and Upper Mississippi River Basin Commission.

Missouri Lewis and Clark Bicentennial Commission

The Missouri Lewis and Clark Bicentennial Commission was created to coordinate activities to commemorate the 200th anniversary of the Lewis and Clark Expedition in 2004. The commission is developing and coordinating effective means to promote public awareness of the historical significance of the expedition related to Missouri. In addition, the bicentennial commission is a catalyst for accomplishing Missouri's Lewis and Clark bicentennial capital improvement projects, programs and special events. The bicentennial projects and events are comprised of public, private and foundation projects.

The executive director of the commission also serves as liaison between the other 14 states participating in the Lewis and Clark bicentennial. The commission serves as a statewide umbrella for bringing together Missouri's communities, the National Park Service and other federal agencies as well as private groups planning projects and events. The commission reports to the governor in October of each year.

The commission was authorized by Executive Order 98-06, which was signed by late Governor Mel Carnahan in 1998. A new executive order signed by Governor Bob Holden in 2003 added three additional agencies to the commission. The commission has 21 members, including two co-chairs, agency representatives, members at large and an executive director. The bipartisan members serve a single term that expires at conclusion of commemoration activities in fall 2006.

The department's Outreach and Assistance Center works to create an environment of understanding by providing information, facilitating communication, and developing and maintaining partnerships to foster resource sustainability. The center provides direct departmental information and technical and financial assistance to citizens, businesses, schools and local governments. The liaison for appointments to the department's boards and commissions also serves in this office. Offices in the Outreach and Assistance Center include the Community Assistance Office, Communications and Education Office, Missouri Energy Center, State Historic Preservation Office, the Kansas City and St. Louis Urban Outreach Offices, and the Financial and Administrative Services Office.

Community Assistance Office

The Community Assistance Office provides a single point of contact to put Missourians in touch with information, education, and financial and technical assistance throughout the department. It provides service to businesses, industry, communities and citizens statewide. The office also helps connect the public with financial resources in other state and local agencies that deal with natural resource issues, making this office a 'portal' through which communities can access not only the department's financial assistance and information, but connections with other agencies' resources, too. The funding opportunities presented to the public address air, water, land, energy and several other quality-of-life issues that affect economic development in Missouri, helping communities and businesses utilize their resources in other areas.

Communications and Education Office

The Communications and Education Office provides public information support for the department by working with the news media and by producing a variety of publications, including the department's award-winning magazine Missouri Resources. This office provides support for department special events and development of a Web site that receives more than 1 million visits per month. The Communications and Education Office also provides professional development courses and workshop opportunities to Missouri educators on environmental issues statewide.

Environmental Assistance Office

The Environmental Assistance Office provides information and assistance to business owners, local governments, educational institutions and the general public on how to control or reduce pollution. Assistance is provided through telephone conversations, written communications, workshops, personal meetings and non-regulatory evaluations and assessments of facilities. The office also coordinates training and certification of operators of drinking water, wastewater and concentrated animal feeding operation treatment facilities. The program supports the Small Business Compliance Advisory Committee, which evaluates the effects of environmental requirements on small business.

Missouri Energy Center

The Missouri Energy Center focuses on three areas of responsibility: analyzing energy supplies and prices, encouraging the use of energy-efficient practices and advocating for renewable energy resources and technologies to benefit Missouri's environment and economy.

Center employees provide technical and financial assistance for energy-efficiency and renewable-energy improvements; support market development and demonstration projects promoting clean energy sources and technologies; and provide energy data, information and research on energy issues to all Missourians.

Missouri Energy Center employees work with residential, agricultural, educational, local government, business and industrial clients to develop energy-efficiency programs and measures that pay back the initial investment within a reasonable time frame. Staff members consult with the Office of Administration and other agencies to integrate energy efficiency into state buildings and purchases.

The center trains other state agencies to use alternative fuel vehicles in compliance with state regulations, and it partners with the federal Clean Cities programs in Missouri's metropolitan areas to strive for cleaner air and water through alternative transportation fuels and technologies. Center employees also manage the mid-Missouri rideshare program and connect Missouri commuters to the carpooling program nearest them.

The Missouri Energy Center provides financial assistance for energy-efficiency projects and administers the low-income weatherization assistance program, which serves Missouri citizens through 18 local agencies. The program makes more than 2,000 low-income family homes more energy efficient and safe each year by installing measures such as wall and attic insulation, cleaning and tuning heating systems, and reducing air infiltration. The Energy Center's low-cost energy revolving loan fund helps schools, colleges, universities and local governments finance energy-efficiency projects so that money saved can be used for other public needs.

Missouri Energy Policy Council

The Missouri Department of Natural Resources also chairs the Governor's Energy Policy Council, which was established by executive order. The council considers and makes recommendations on several issues, including: major aspects of energy policy, energy supplies and energy prices; consumer protections, including consumer education, universal access, low-income assistance funding and the impact of regulatory changes; new energy technologies and trends; opportunities to increase energy efficiency, and; opportunities to increase the use of diverse and clean energy supplies to improve the economic vitality and environmental quality of Missouri residences, businesses, farms and transportation.

The Missouri Department of Natural Resources chairs the council, which includes representatives from several state agencies, the General Assembly, the general public, utilities, business and industry, the buildings sector, labor, energy efficiency organizations, renewable energy organizations/ businesses and environmental organizations.

State Historic Preservation Office

Missouri's official historic preservation program is administered by the Missouri State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO). As the authorized SHPO, the office receives an annual allocation of federal Historic Preservation Fund monies from the U.S. Department of the Interior's National Park Service. These funds are used to help identify, evaluate and protect Missouri's cultural resources.

The office coordinates surveys statewide to identify historic, architectural and archaeological resources. Significant properties identified in the surveys may be nominated to the National Register of Historic Places, the federal list of properties deemed worthy of recognition and preservation. Missouri has more than 1,400 listings on the National Register, including more than 19,000 individual properties. The Missouri Cultural Resource Inventory is being built from information gathered from the survey and nomination process.

As part of its federally mandated responsibilities, the office reviews all federally funded or licensed projects in Missouri to ensure compliance with related federal legislation. The office also administers federal Historic Preservation Fund matching grants for identifying and preserving cultural resources. Through Missouri's Certified Local Government program, the SHPO trains municipalities in local preservation techniques and awards federal matching grants to help accomplish local preservation goals.

Since 1976, federal tax incentives and related legislation have promoted interest in rehabilitating historic buildings. In 1998, that interest was augmented and revitalized with the authorization of state tax credits, administered by the Community Development Division of the Missouri Department of Economic Development. The federal tax credits are available to private investors who rehabilitate historic buildings for uses that produce income, such as office buildings and apartments. The state tax credits may be used in combination with federal credits for rehabilitation on income-producing property or for the rehabilitation of non-income-producing residential properties. The SHPO reviews both federal and state tax credit applications for historic eligibility and conformity with preservation guidelines and standards.

The SHPO also works with the Missouri Department of Economic Development under the Missouri Main Street program to foster preservation-based economic development in Missouri's small towns. The office also administers Missouri's Historic Preservation Revolving Fund, a state fund that allows the department to help preserve endangered historic buildings.

The Missouri Advisory Council on Historic Preservation reviews all Missouri nominations to the National Register of Historic Places. The council advises the department director, the state's historic preservation officer, on historic preservation needs, plans and issues.

The Kansas City and St. Louis Urban Outreach Offices serve the Kansas City and St. Louis metropolitan areas, providing a user-friendly, multi-media front door to the agency for urban constituents, to address the unique and often complicated resource and environmental challenges faced by Missouri's urbanized and urbanizing areas. Urban Outreach staff members represent Outreach and Assistance Center offices including the Missouri Energy Center, the State Historic Preservation Office and the Environmental Assistance Office, as well as coordinating urban outreach work for other divisions and programs of the department. The Urban Outreach Offices work with numerous sectors in their communities, including local government and its elected officials, state officials, business, non-profit organizations, local cultural institutions, community groups, and individuals who may need assistance. The mission of these offices is to connect the people of Kansas City and St. Louis with information and resources to help them protect the environment, improve communities, understand and comply with or exceed regulations, and redevelop properties to enhance economic development.

the Petroleum Storage Tank Insurance Fund, which insures tank owners against the risks associated with leaks of petroleum products from their tanks or piping. It also provides funding to clean up certain properties where historic tank operations contaminated the environment, restoring those properties to economic viability.

The 11-member board includes the commissioner of administration, the directors of the departments of Agriculture and Natural Resources and eight citizens appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate for four-year terms. The citizens represent tank owners, financial institutions, industrial and commercial users of petroleum, the insurance industry and the public.

Air and Land Protection Division

Telephone (573) 751-6892 / FAX: (573) 751-9277

Protecting and enhancing the quality of Missouri's environment is the responsibility of the department's environmental divisions. The Air and Land Protection Division's specific focus is to prevent pollution and to protect the public from harmful emissions, illegal discharges and waste disposal activities. The division assists Missourians with these goals through the traditional roles of permitting and inspections, and through proactive efforts to revitalize contaminated sites for redevelopment, assisting local entities with meth lab cleanups, environmental emergency response and more.

The division administers five technical programs: air pollution control, environmental services, land reclamation, solid waste management and hazardous waste management. The division has three policy-making commissions: the Air Conservation Commission, the Hazardous Waste Management Commission and the Land Reclamation Commission and one advisory board, the Solid Waste Advisory Board.

Air Pollution Control Program

The department's Air Pollution Control Program carries out the policies established by the Air Conservation Commission.

The commission, through a program involving four delegated local governments and citizen input, develops strategies for bringing pollutants down to safe levels in those areas with excessive pollutants.

To maintain clean air in Missouri, the Air Pollution Control Program surveys and inspects sources of air pollution. If a source consistently violates the state's air pollution control regulations, it is subject to enforcement action. The commission can grant variances, however, to individual operations when a strict application of the regulations would cause an unreasonable hardship without public benefit.

The Air Pollution Control Program also evaluates industries wanting to locate in Missouri, predicting their emissions and their impact on the state's air quality and requiring restrictions on emissions where necessary.

grams. In addition, the program receives notifications of environmental emergencies, provides technical assistance for incidents involving hazardous chemicals, investigates contaminated sites, conducts air quality monitoring and assists local agencies with monitoring.

Calls about environmental emergencies, including oil and chemical spills, are reported to the program on an environmental emergency telephone hotline 24 hours a day, seven days a week at (573) 634-2436. Callers can receive advice and assistance. Technicians can be dispatched to oversee cleanup, sampling or other emergency activities.

The program operates air monitoring instruments at 30 locations throughout the state, performs air quality studies and uploads air quality data to the Internet for public access. Water samples are collected from streams, wastewater treatment plants and industrial facilities that discharge into Missouri waterways. Various tests are performed to determine how the discharges affect Missouri streams. Samples are collected at both abandoned hazardous waste sites and at facilities that are actively engaged in treating, storing or disposing of hazardous wastes. More than 125,000 total analyses are performed each year in the analytical laboratory on air, water and soil samples. This includes 100,000 analyses on drinking water from public water supplies across the state.

The program assists with safe-handling management and disposal of hazardous chemicals from clandestine drug labs. Twenty specially designed collection stations are located across the state to provide law enforcement a safe and secure location to temporarily store seized drug lab chemicals. The program provides clandestine drug laboratory investigation training and health and safety re-certification in cooperation with the Missouri State Highway Patrol.

The program manages the Chemical Accident Prevention Risk Management Program, providing technical advice to help entities comply with federal law. Regulated facilities are encouraged to adopt effective chemical accident prevention programs and to work with Local Emergency Planning Committees to prepare for potential accidental releases.

Hazardous Waste Program

The department's Hazardous Waste Program carries out the policies of the Hazardous Waste Management Commission. The commission establishes regulations for the generation, transportation, treatment, storage, clean up and disposal of hazardous waste and hazardous substances. The commission also hears appeals of decisions made by the department director and rules on requests for variances from hazardous waste management and hazardous substance regulations.

The department's Hazardous Waste Program protects public health and the environment by keeping Missouri's water, soil and air from being polluted with hazardous wastes and hazardous substances. In addition to enforcing the state laws passed to ensure proper management of hazardous wastes being generated today, the program also oversees the state's remedial fund for cleanup of problem sites resulting from poor waste management.

The Hazardous Waste Program reviews applications for permits for facilities that treat, store and dispose of hazardous waste to ensure these facilities conform to environmental laws and regulations. The program also licenses hazardous waste transporters that meet state requirements.

The program's enforcement staff helps the regional offices inspect generators and treatment, storage and disposal facilities, and takes appropriate action to ensure a timely return to compliance for those generators or facilities that are out of compliance.

The program provides oversight for 98 hazardous waste treatment, storage and disposal facilities in Missouri. Currently, 24 are actively handling hazardous waste. The program maintains a database for more than 13,000 Missouri sites registered as generators of hazardous waste. Many of these sites are no longer generating waste but the information is maintained for future reference. The program also maintains the same information for more than 11,000 sites outside Missouri that have registered to bring their hazardous waste into Missouri for treatment, storage or disposal.

The program oversees cleanup activities at 45 active or formerly used federal facilities in Missouri. These facilities are either U.S. Department of Energy or U.S. Department of Defense sites requiring remediation of hazardous or radioactive wastes that were disposed of prior to the current laws and regulations. The program also has several field offices, which allow on-site presence during federal facility cleanups.

The program evaluates and remediates federal National Priorities List (NPL) sites, non-NPL sites and sites on or proposed for the Registry of Abandoned or Uncontrolled Sites in Missouri. The program has primary responsibility for 105 of the 154 active hazardous waste substances sites in Missouri including six of 25 National Priority List sites.

The program promotes voluntary cleanups by allowing landowners to pay voluntarily for state oversight of hazardous substance cleanups. Upon satisfactory cleanup, the department will issue a letter of completed remediation, which will facilitate the transfer of real estate. Out of 395 voluntary cleanup applications, 156 sites are completed with 138 sites currently active.

The department's Hazardous Waste Program has oversight of underground storage tanks and leaking underground storage tanks. The program oversees regulations governing the construction, installation, operation and closure of underground storage tanks and also is responsible for the investigation and remediation of all leaking petroleum underground storage tank sites.

The department's Hazardous Waste Program is responsible for cleaning up contaminated dry cleaner sites using a fund capitalized with fees paid by the dry cleaning industry.

Land Reclamation Program

The Land Reclamation Program works with the mining industry and Missouri communities to minimize the environmental and health-related impacts of mining activities in Missouri. The program is empowered by law to put into effect the regulations and statues that regulate the state's mining industry.

The Land Reclamation Program carries out Missouri's Abandoned Mine Land program to reclaim abandoned coal mine sites within Missouri that have safety hazards or environmental problems. Abandoned mine lands are defined as lands mined prior to August 1977, which use 100 percent federal funds for reclamation. Missouri's abandoned mine land emergency program allows the Land Reclamation Program to reduce or control emergency situations in which adverse effects of past coal mining pose an immediate danger to the public.

The Land Reclamation Program is responsible for the issuance of strip mining permits related to the mining of industrial and metallic minerals including coal, limestone, sand, gravel, clay, tar sands, barite, sandstone, granite and traprock. As part of the permitting process mining companies must provide financial assurance to the Land Reclamation Program that provides for reclamation should the company not be able to complete this activity. Reclamation bonds ensure that sites are properly graded, replanted and maintained after mining ceases. After the mining company completes all required reclamation, the commission releases these financial assurances and relieves the responsible company of any further reclamation liabilities.

Land Reclamation Commission

The Land Reclamation Commission is the ruling body over Missouri's mining requirements set forth in three separate state statutes. These mining statutes protect public health, safety and the environment from the adverse effect of mining and assure the beneficial restoration of mined lands. The seven-member commission includes three statutory and four public members. The statutory members are the state geologist, the director of the Missouri Department of Conservation and the staff director of the Clean Water Commission. With Senate approval, the governor appoints four public members. Only one member of the commission may have a direct link with the mining industry.

Solid Waste Management Program

The department's Solid Waste Management Program works to help Missourians and Missouri businesses properly manage their solid waste to protect public health and the environment.

The department's Solid Waste Management Program issues permits and permit modifications for solid waste disposal and processing facilities. Staff reviews proposed permits for facility design, construction, operations and proper monitoring controls. Program staff inspects permitted facilities quarterly and oversees the operations of these facilities to ensure that they comply with these permit conditions and do not have a negative impact on human health and the environment. In addition, staff investigates reports of illegal dumping across the state. Enforcement activities are conducted when necessary to ensure proper solid waste management. Program staff teaches state regulations to landfill operators. Other focuses of the program include planning, financial and technical assistance and educational activities that inform the public of the relationship between individual consumption and solid waste management.

Passage of Missouri's Solid Waste Omnibus Law in 1990 created the Solid Waste Advisory Board. The membership of this board today consists of the chair of the executive board of each of Missouri's 20 recognized solid waste management districts, three citizen members and two representatives from the solid waste industry appointed by the director of the Missouri Department of Natural Resources.

The Solid Waste Advisory Board advises the department about the effectiveness of the department's technical assistance programs; problems experienced by the solid waste management districts in developing and implementing solid waste management plans; the effect of proposed rules and regulations upon districts; criteria for awarding grants from the solid waste management fund; solid waste management issues pertinent to the districts; the development of solid waste disposal alternatives and other related issues.

Water Protection and Soil Conservation Division

Protecting and enhancing the quality of Missouri's water resources is the responsibility of the Water Protection and Soil Conservation Division. The division oversees and integrates technical environmental programs for public drinking water protection, soil and water conservation and water pollution control. The department's regional offices also report to this division.

The Clean Water, Safe Drinking Water and the Soil and Water Conservation Districts' commissions are the three policymaking bodies assigned to this division. The division works closely with the Department of Health and Senior Services, the Department of Conservation, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Economic Development, the University of Missouri, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the U. S. Environmental Protection Agency and numerous local partners in protecting the state's water quality.

The five regional offices and seven satellite offices deal with local environmental matters. Regional offices in St. Louis, Kansas City, Springfield, Poplar Bluff and Macon provide the department closer contact with the public through field inspections of regulated facilities, complaint investigation, tank monitoring, front-line troubleshooting and technical assistance, as well as local environmental emergency response. Regional offices support the air pollution control, water pollution control, environmental emergency response, public drinking water, solid waste management, hazardous waste, and soils and water conservation efforts. Satellite offices are generally located in state park facilities near Branson, Festus, LaGrange, Osage Beach, Sullivan and Troy; the satellite office in Neosho is located in a U.S. Department of Agriculture facility.

Public Drinking Water Program

Supervising the design, construction, operation and maintenance of public water supply systems is the responsibility of the department's Public Drinking Water Program. Technical assistance on water-supply problems related to cities, water districts, subdivisions, mobile home parks and other facilities is provided. The program also offers training for public water supply operators.

SCOTT TOTTEN
Director, Water Protection and Soil Conservation Division

The department's Public Drinking Water Program requires monitoring of contaminants in public water systems and provides assistance in data interpretation and data management.

Financial assistance is provided through grants and low-interest loans to improve public health protection, regulatory compliance and customer affordability at public water systems.

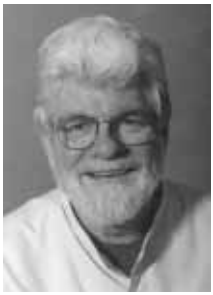

Safe Drinking Water Commission

The Safe Drinking Water Commission establishes criteria and procedures for administering the drinking water state revolving fund, which makes federal and state loan funds available to communities to upgrade and improve their drinking water systems.

The Safe Drinking Water Commission is a nine-member commission appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. Five members represent the public and four members represent public water systems. The commission helps the department's Public Drinking Water Program to ensure that Missouri's public water systems are providing safe drinking water. The commission adopts rules to carry out the Missouri Safe Drinking Water Law and Federal Safe Drinking Water Act.

Soil and Water Conservation Program

The mission of the department's Soil and Water Conservation Program is to administer the policies and general programs developed by the Soil and Water Districts Commission for saving Missouri's soil and water through the conservation districts in their work with landowners.

The primary responsibility of the department's Soil and Water Conservation Program is to assist districts as they promote soil and water conservation to their constituents. The districts provide financial incentives and technical assistance to agricultural landowners as well as educate their communities through field days, tours and programs in schools.

Other program activities include encouraging concentrated land treatment in special watershed areas, accelerating a statewide soil survey, administering statewide cost-share and loan-interest share programs and providing educational programs. The program also provides direct assistance to the 114 districts through grants and training.

Soil and Water Districts Commission

The Soil and Water Districts Commission determines the policies and programs to conserve Missouri's soil and water resources. The commission is responsible for the soils portion of the parks-and-soils sales tax. The soil and water conservation districts promote farming practices that reduce soil erosion and sedimentation of water in Missouri.

waters by issuing operating permits for the construction and operation of wastewater discharges. In addition, the program monitors statewide water quality conditions through stream and lake sampling and other means.

The basic functions of the program are planning, permit issuance, compliance monitoring, financial and technical assistance and enforcement.

Planning activities establish water quality standards, identify water-pollution problems, develop solutions and help implement those solutions.

Permits set wastewater treatment levels necessary to protect water quality. These treatment levels are contained as conditions in permits issued to municipal, industrial and other dischargers.

The program evaluates discharge-monitoring data and permits, and performs inspections and investigations to determine whether facilities are in compliance with applicable laws and regulations.

In addition to municipal, industrial and other point-source discharges, the department's Water Pollution Control Program provides financial and technical assistance for the control of non-point pollution caused by agriculture, mining, transportation and other activities.

The department's Water Pollution Control Program provides loans and grants to local governments to assist in the construction of wastewater, drinking water and stormwater facilities. The department's water pollution control and public drinking water programs perform engineering reviews and inspections to ensure adequate design and construction of facilities.

Clean Water Commission

Seven members serve on the Clean Water Commission, with two members being knowledgeable about the needs of agriculture, industry or mining. The seventh member shall be knowledgeable concerning the needs of publicly owned wastewater treatment works. The commission adopts rules and policies, hears appeals and establishes funding priorities, which are carried out by the department's Water Pollution Control Program.

Geological Survey and Resource Assessment Division

The Geological Survey and Resource Assessment Division is responsible for Missouri's land, water and mineral resources and their protection, potential use and development. The division restores land survey monuments, provides survey data, protects groundwater supplies, defines hazardous areas such as those subject to earthquake or catastrophic collapse and protects the public by assuring the construction of safe dams.

The results of studies conducted by the division are available to the public through published reports, maps and other documents. Professional staff members conduct seminars, workshops and field trips. They also are available to assist in solving a wide variety of geological, water resource, dam safety and land surveying problems.

The division administers a cooperative program with the U.S. Geological Survey to obtain certain types of water resource information and make it available to the public. It also coordinates with the U.S. Geological Survey on the National Cooperative Geologic Mapping Program, a national effort to complete geologic maps for all states at a 1:24,000 scale.

A number of activities relating to oil and gas, geological studies of waste sites, spill responses, land survey work and enforcement of well drilling law, are funded through agreements with other agencies or supported by fees. A geographic information system, operated within the division, provides information on water resources, geology, well locations, mineral resources and geologic hazards.

Division Director and State Geologist

The division director serves as the state geologist and is responsible for ensuring that statutory obligations are met. The state geologist is the administrator of the Missouri State Oil and Gas Council and a member of the Land Reclamation Commission, the Well Installation Board, the Missouri Boundary Commission and the Geologist Registration Board.

Geological Survey Program

The Geological Survey Program assists the citizens of Missouri by using geologic data to manage land and water resources in an environmentally responsible manner. The demand for geologic maps in the assessment of public-oriented projects such as waste disposal, geologic hazards and groundwater resources is increasingly important in answering the concerns of the public. Accurate, reliable maps showing surficial material and bedrock distribution, composition and thickness are a vital part of resource management and environmental protection. Such work is essential in identifying geologic hazards. The state also has a diversified mineral industry. It is important that citizens of Missouri have knowledge of their mineral resources to make responsible decisions.

Staff in this program also conduct geologic field investigations that provide technical assistance to the public and government agencies. These services include determining the environmental hazards posed by waste disposal practices and spills of hazardous materials. Geological and hydrological principals also are applied to minimizing the impact of chemical releases or waste spills.

Staff in this program work to protect Missouri's valuable supply of fresh groundwater from pollution so that all Missourians can utilize and enjoy the resources. This is done through the implementation of the Well Drillers and Oil and Gas Acts, and the Underground Injection Control Regulations of the Safe Drinking Water Act. Working with industry and the public, construction standards are set. This program also is responsible for issuing permits to pump installers and the drillers of water, monitoring, mineral exploration and heat pump wells.

Staff in this program also helps to protect groundwater resources from improper injection of fluids into the subsurface. Permits are issued for wells that meet construction standards, periodic inspections are conducted and information is provided detailing proper injection procedures.

State Oil and Gas Council

The State Oil and Gas Council fosters, encourages and promotes the orderly and economic development, production and utilization of Missouri oil and gas resources, provides for the protection of strata containing fresh water of present and future value, and provides for the elimination of surface and subsurface pollution or waste during and after drilling, producing and abandonment procedures in all wells.

Dam and Reservoir Safety Program

The Dam and Reservoir Safety Program, through the Dam and Reservoir Safety Council, is responsible for ensuring that all new and existing non-agricultural, non-federal dams 35 feet or more in height meet minimum safety standards. The program staff reviews engineering plans and specifications; conducts hydrologic, hydraulic and structural analysis of dams; monitors construction of new dams and modification of existing dams; may perform safety inspections of existing dams; and may respond to dam safety emergencies.

The basic functions of the program are inspections, permit issuance, compliance and re view, data management, and emergency response.

The program's permit activity involves the issuance of construction, registration and safety permits. Safety standards set by the Dam and Reservoir Safety Council must be met before permits are issued. Registration and safety permits require implementation of operation and maintenance plans.

The program responds to emergency conditions and homeland security issues on all regulated dams and provides technical assistance on dams that are a threat of failure.

Data management includes maintaining data on more than 4,000 dams for use by emergency management officials, private owners, professional engineers, mining companies, educational institutions, other government agencies and the general public.

Compliance and review activities include evaluation of engineering data and other information to determine whether a dam is safe in accordance with applicable laws and regulations. The council conducts administrative hearings. All seven members are appointed by the governor.

Water Resources Program

The Water Resources Program responsibilities are defined in the water resource law, which addresses the development, conservation and utilization of the state's water resources. The program provides technical assistance in groundwater and surface water resource hydrology, planning and water use records to assist state agencies and communities in meeting their water-related needs. Functional units of the program include river basin planning and policy, groundwater, surface water, water use economics, wetland conservation, source water protection and the state water plan.

The river basin planning and policy staff coordinate issues relating to major river basins that affect Missouri. Geologists and hydrologists respond to inquiries from the public concerning water quality and quantity, spring systems, groundwater recharge, caves and cave systems and aquifer characteristics. Staff cooperate with the U.S. Geological Survey in processing and publishing water level and flood data from the state's observation well and stream gauging network. Technical support is provided in surface water such as reviewing projects and reports for hydropower, water supply, flood protection, instream flow and drought planning and response.

The program provides technical leadership to the Climate and Weather Committee of the Statewide Drought Assessment Committee and technical assistance to those involved with wetlands. Staff in this program also coordinate the development of the state water plan, a long-range, comprehensive statewide program concerning the use and availability of the state's surface and groundwater resources. This includes existing and future needs for drinking water, agriculture, industry, recreation, environmental protection and related needs. Program staff coordinate with state and federal agencies, and private sector organizations and ensure public participation in the development and revision of the State Water Plan.

Division of State Parks

This division acquires, develops and manages state parks and historic sites, and coordinates statewide programs in the areas of outdoor recreation and trails.

In addition to providing Missourians with recreational opportunities, this division preserves natural and historically significant resources. The division is funded primarily through the parks-and-soils sales tax, which was approved by voters in 1984, 1988 and 1996.

State parks and historic sites

Acquiring, protecting, developing and interpreting a well-balanced system of areas of outstanding natural and historic importance is a function of the Division of State Parks. The state park system includes diverse recreational opportunities, ranging from wilderness areas to trout parks. The park system includes 83 state parks and historic sites totaling more than 139,000 acres and attracts about 18 million visitors annually.

State parks protect outstanding natural features and interpret their significance for the general public through various means including programs. Recreational opportunities include camping, picnicking, swimming, boating, fishing and hiking.

DOUGLAS EIKEN, Ph.D.
Director
Division of State Parks

State historic sites commemorate events or structures of statewide historical importance and honor persons of state and national importance. Development of these historic sites is oriented toward restoration. These sites include interpretation by signs, tour guides, booklets or museum exhibits.

Missouri State Park Advisory Board

The board was created in 1986 to advise the department on matters relating to state parks and historic sites. The board, appointed by the governor, is composed of E. Sanford Baker, Kansas City, chair; Emily R. Firebaugh, Farmington; Ann Johnson, Holts Summit; Don Johnson, Festus; Howard J. Miedler, Moberly; Terry J. Satterlee, Kansas City; Ed Stegner, Pilot Grove; and Andrew Wood, Neosho.

Grant Management

The Division of State Parks is responsible for administering federal grant programs that provide financial assistance to individuals, groups and public entities for a variety of purposes.

The division administers funds from the Recreational Trails Program, which provides federal money for the development of trails. The Missouri Trails Advisory Board makes recommendations on grant awards and policy issues for the grant program. This advisory board is made up of representatives of trail user groups, including those for motorized trails, walking trails, bicycle trails and trails accessible by individuals with disabilities.

The division also administers and monitors projects funded through the federal Land and Water Conservation Fund (LWCF) program, which provides federal funds to local outdoor recreation projects. In addition to administering grants, the division develops the Statewide Comprehensive Outdoor Recreation Plan.

The LWCF grants are awarded through the State Inter-Agency Council for Outdoor Recreation (SIACOR). SIACOR awards and oversees grants, provides a forum for consideration of outdoor recreation problems in the state and provides advice regarding problem solving and planning. Division staff provides administrative services to SIACOR; notifies the public regarding availability of grant funds; evaluates grant proposals; makes recommendations regarding funding to SIACOR; administers projects through acquisition, construction and reimbursement phases; and performs follow-up inspections to assure compliance.

SIACOR members include the commissioner of the Office of Administration; a representative from the University of Missouri; and directors of the Departments of Natural Resources, Agriculture, Conservation, Economic Development, Transportation and Social Services. The director of the Department of Natural Resources serves as council chair.

Thomas Hart Benton Homestead Memorial Commission

The Kansas City home of the late artist Thomas Hart Benton is a historic site administered by the Division of State Parks.

The department's mission "will provide a safe and secure environment for all individuals through efficient and effective law enforcement, national defense, disaster preparedness, service to veterans and education".

The department is organized into 11 separate functional agencies: Office of the Director, Missouri Capitol Police, Division of Fire Safety, Division of Highway Safety, Division of Liquor Control, Missouri State Highway Patrol, Missouri State Water Patrol, Missouri National Guard (Office of the Adjutant General), State Emergency Management Agency, Missouri Veterans' Commission, and the Missouri Gaming Commission.

Since 1983, Missouri Capitol Police has been the primary law enforcement agency for the 72-acre state office building campus known as the Capitol Complex. Within that area are located the State Capitol Building, Jefferson Building, Transportation Building, Supreme Court, James C. Kirkpatrick State Information Center, Broadway Building, Truman Building, Social Services Electronic Data Processing Building, State Health Laboratory, Governor's Mansion, Jefferson Landing historic site, associated parking facilities and grounds. In recent years, Capitol Police has expanded their services to include state agencies and facilities that have moved from the Capitol Complex to other areas in Jefferson City. Capitol Police has statute authority on all state owned/leased property in Cole County. Capitol Police oversee a computerized, centrally-monitored, fire/life safety/after-hours entry control system in the Capitol Complex buildings. Closed circuit television monitoring in strategic locations and automatic ring-down emergency telephones have been among several security improvements added since 1983.

Field Operations

Missouri Capitol Police officers patrol the buildings and grounds in their jurisdiction, 24-hours a day, seven days a week. Patrols are made on foot, by vehicle, and on bicycle. Criminal investigations, medical emergencies, traffic accidents, security and fire alarms, and security escorts are only a few of the many incidents and calls for service that officers provide to over 15,000 state employees and over 200,000 annual visitors to the seat of government.

Executive Protection

A team of specially trained and certified police officers are assigned on a full-time basis to the Missouri Governor's Mansion. Officers on this team provide residential security for the state's first family 24-hours a day. A stand-alone fire and security system with redundant monitoring at the Capitol Police communications office is complemented by a closed circuit television monitoring system used for the security and safety at the house and the grounds. Training has been provided for these officers by the U.S. Secret Service, Pennsylvania State Police and other executive protection agencies.

Communications Operations

Capitol Police Communications and Command Center is a point of contact for those who need police services in the Capitol Complex 24-hours a day, seven days a week. Communications operators utilize computer terminals that interface with the Missouri Uniform Law Enforcement System (MULES), the National Crime Information Center (NCIC), the Missouri Department of Revenue Motor Vehicle and Operator files, and other information systems. In addition to radio and telephone communications with the public and other agencies, communications operators are responsible for management of a fire/life safety monitoring system which includes fire, intrusion and "panic" alarms; after-hours building access for most Complex facilities; and collection of weather-related information for implementation and dissemination of the State Employee's Hazardous Travel Policy.

Special Services

Capitol Police members provide specialized training and services on request. Special investigations involving suspected criminal conduct, site security surveys and programs covering personal safety and other safety-related issues have been provided at several sites in Jefferson City and other locations throughout the state.

The Missouri State Fire Marshal's office was established by the 76th Missouri General Assembly in 1973. Effective September 1985 through legislation reorganization, the office was renamed the Division of Fire Safety and was housed within the Missouri Department of Public Safety.

The mission of the Division of Fire Safety is to provide proper training and certification to fire fighters and emergency response personnel throughout the state. This in-depth training assures that Missouri citizens will receive services from highly qualified professionals. In addition, the division is charged with oversight and enforcement of other programs to maintain the safety and well-being of the general public. Responsibilities include providing fire safety standards for all day care centers licensed by the state; investigating all suspicious fires in the state for cause and origin as provided by law; regulating the use and sales of fireworks; training of hazardous materials to local fire departments and mutual aid services, especially in response to large-scale emergencies; inspecting and licensing of nonexempt boilers and pressure vessels in Missouri; and overseeing the Elevator Safety Act and Amusement Ride Safety Act.

Fire Service Training

The Division of Fire Safety's Training Unit is responsible for the training and certification of over 25,000 fire fighters in the State of Missouri. In addition, the Training Unit's customers include representatives from law enforcement, private industry, emergency response personnel, and other state agencies. Since the implementation of the certification program in 1986, and as a result of HB 230 in 1992, the division has trained and tested over 20,000 individuals, while offering fourteen different courses and fourteen levels of certification.

In addition, this unit of the division is responsible for recording state fire incident reports and compiling information on fire losses throughout Missouri.

Fire Inspection

Currently, the Division of Fire Safety's Inspection Unit consists of two Regional Chief Inspectors and twelve fire inspectors located in various areas of the state.

The unit is responsible for conducting fire safety inspections at childcare facilities licensed by state agencies including the Department of Health and Division of Family Services. Other licensed facilities that require similar fire safety inspections include alcohol/drug treatment programs, residential programs for the Department of Mental Health and senior centers for the Division of Aging.

In 2002, division inspectors conducted 12,437 fire safety inspections, ensuring the safety of occupants.

The Inspection Unit also plays an active role in the inspection/enforcement of licensed fireworks operators throughout the state.

Fire Investigation

The Fire Investigation Unit consists of a Deputy Chief, two Regional Chiefs and 17 field investigators located throughout the state. This unit is contacted by law enforcement and fire departments to assist in the investigation of any fire, explosion or related offense. The unit presently has three K-9 accelerant detection dogs to assist with investigations, which have proved to be a vital tool in combating the crime of arson throughout the state. In 1997, the unit was provided with two explosive detection canines that assist with bomb investigations and bomb threats. In fiscal year 2002, 1,614 fire investigations were conducted. The Investigation Unit has saved insurance companies over $25 million annually in claims, with a criminal arrest rate of approximately 35 percent.

Fireworks

The Division of Fire Safety's Fire Investigation Unit enforces the fireworks safety laws. Each year, operating permits are issued to approximately 1,300 fireworks vendors, resulting in nearly $100,000 in income deposited into General Revenue for the state of Missouri. During the regular selling seasons, fireworks stands are inspected by investigators and inspectors for safety violations as well as proper permits and products. During the 2000 fireworks season alone, approximately 2,500 pounds of illegal or improperly marked fireworks were confiscated and disposed of. Complaints from citizens are received informing of possible violations, which result in on-site inspections of the fireworks business. Any violations found result in the closing of such business pending further investigation.

Public Education

The Division of Fire Safety participates in local and regional activities by providing fire prevention education and assists local agencies with fire safety instruction.

In 1997, the Division of Fire Safety was selected by NFPA to receive the "Learn Not To Burn Champion Award". Learn Not To Burn is a fire education curriculum geared toward K-3 grade students, teaching vital fire safety habits and facts. The Division of Fire Safety offers train-the-trainer workshops throughout the state.

Boiler and Pressure Vessel Rules

Effective November 12, 1986, the division began enforcement of periodic inspections of boilers, including many hot water heaters and pressure vessels located in Missouri. All new installations or reinstallation and repair of used boilers and pressure vessels are required to meet the ASME Code and be registered with the National Board or receive a variance from the Boiler and Pressure Vessel Unit prior to operation. Objects that were in operation prior to November 12, 1986, may be grandfathered but still require periodic inspections. A certificate inspection is required every one or two years, depending on the type of object. Accidents to objects are investigated by the boiler and pressure vessel unit with repairs to be made by a national board "R" stamp holder.

Amusement Ride Safety Act

In 1997, the 89th General Assembly enacted House Bill 276 relating to amusement ride safety.

This legislation places certain requirements upon amusement ride owners/operators when a death or serious physical injury occurs as a result of the operation of an amusement ride. If an injury or death occurs under the purview of the statute, the Division of Fire Safety initiates an investigation into the cause of the accident.

The legislation also places certain restrictions on the rider of an amusement ride. A violation of any restriction may result in criminal prosecution.

During the 2000 Legislative Session, the Amusement Ride Safety Act was revised to require annual safety inspectors on all amusement rides and for those rides to obtain state operating permits before being operated in the state. Also included in this legislation was the appointment of nine individuals representing the amusement ride industry, to an Amusement Ride Safety Board.

In 2002, the division issued nearly 1,000 amusement ride operating permits grossing approximately $15,000 in revenues.

In 1994, the 86th General Assembly enacted House Bill 1035 creating the Elevator Safety Act.

This act established an Elevator Safety Board to develop and adopt a code of rules and regulations relating to the construction, maintenance, testing and inspection of all elevators and similar devices. The legislation requires periodic safety inspections of every elevator and similar devices as specified in the statute. Upon an approved inspection, an operating certificate is issued.

Currently the Elevator Safety Unit employs three full time employees, a Public Safety Manager, an Elevator Safety Inspector and Executive I. To date approximately 13,500 elevator type objects have been registered with the division.

The Department of Liquor Control was established by the Liquor Control Act in 1934 and was restructured as a division within the Department of Public Safety in 1974. The Division of Liquor Control's name was changed to the Division of Alcohol and Tobacco Control in 2003. The Division of Alcohol and Tobacco Control's responsibilities are to enforce the liquor control laws under Chapters 311 and 312, RSMo, the youth access tobacco laws under Chapter 407, RSMo, and the rules and regulations of the Supervisor of Alcohol and Tobacco Control. The responsibilities are primarily threefold: revenue collection agency, liquor licensing agency, and liquor and tobacco enforcement agency.

The liquor control laws and the state's system of alcoholic beverage regulations are designed to ensure the public health and safety as affected by intoxicating beverages. The division supervises the state's revenue derived from the collection of excise taxes on alcoholic beverages and license fees. Additionally, state statute mandates that the division protect the consumer from tainted alcoholic products and the liquor industry from infiltration and exploitation by the criminal element.

The Division of Alcohol and Tobacco Control is headed by the supervisor of alcohol and tobacco control, who is authorized to appoint and employ all agents and assistants as are necessary for the proper enforcement and administration of the Liquor Control Law, Non-intoxicating Beer Law and youth access Tobacco Law. The Supervisor of Alcohol and Tobacco Control has the authority under Chapters 311 and 312, RSMo, to promulgate regulations, issue liquor licenses, suspend, revoke or fine liquor licenses for liquor control law violations. The Supervisor of Alcohol and Tobacco Control also has the authority under Chapter 407, RSMo, to issue citations prohibiting outlets from selling tobacco products for violations of youth access tobacco laws.

Administration, audit and collection section

The main function of the administration, audit and collection section of the Division of Alcohol and Tobacco Control is to assure general compliance with liquor control laws requiring the supervisor to collect excise taxes on all alcoholic beverages sold in this state. This section collects approximately 27 million dollars annually from liquor, wine and beer taxes for deposit into the general revenue fund. This is achieved by auditors regularly conducting audits of licensed manufacturers, wineries, breweries and wholesalers. Auditors also perform retail audits to determine food sales qualifications of resorts and restaurants licensed to sell intoxicating liquor by the drink on Sundays. The auditing section is also responsible for overseeing the proper enforcement of Missouri price posting systems, primary American source of supply enforcement and product testing and registration.

KEITH FULLER
State Supervisor, Missouri
Division of Liquor Control

In addition, this section annually collects and processes 3.8 million dollars in license fees, processes 25,000 license applications and issues licenses after they are approved by the enforcement section and the supervisor. This section also acts as support to all aspects of the division with record retention, fiscal processing and data processing support.

Enforcement section

The Division of Alcohol and Tobacco Control's enforcement section consists of three districts. The enforcement section is staffed with two district supervisors, thirty special agents and three agents. Special agents and agents are assigned territories within the district. All enforcement personnel are required to attend the basic and advanced basic law enforcement classes conducted at the Missouri State Highway Patrol Law Enforcement Academy.

The enforcement section fulfills its responsibilities of enforcing the liquor control and tobacco laws by conducting routine inspections and investigations; following up on citizen complaints; taking applications for over 25,000 new or renewal liquor licenses annually; working in a cooperative and coordinating effort with local law enforcement; and providing information to licensees concerning liquor control laws, tobacco laws and regulations.

As of August 28, 2001 the division assumed enforcement of tobacco laws with the passage of HB 381. The division has implemented and enforces the provisions of Section 407.924 to 407.934. The division is charged with enforcing youth access to alcohol and tobacco products and enforcing the laws to vendors who sell to minors.

Badges in Business

The Division of Alcohol and Tobacco Control, in partnership with the Division of Highway Safety, has successfully introduced an innovative enforcement program called Badges in Business. Badges in Business allows State Alcohol and Tobacco Control Agents to periodically be present on a licensed premise at the request of the retailer. Agents assist store employees in the detections of underage patrons and false identifications. As minors enter and attempt to purchase alcoholic beverages, they are detained and taken into custody. The division has found a vast majority of underage youth attempting to purchase alcohol using fake IDs. The success of this project is largely attributable to the assistance and cooperative efforts of the Division of Highway Safety, local prosecutors, licensed retailers and local law enforcement agencies.

Educational programs

In recent years the division has taken a more proactive stance by providing industry education and law enforcement education programs. Seminars for thousands of retail servers across the state have been conducted to reduce incidences of underage drinking and the over serving of intoxicating liquors to customers and the sale of tobacco products to underage individuals. Informational pamphlets are also provided to assist liquor licensees and tobacco outlets in compliance with liquor control laws and tobacco laws. The division provides liquor control and tobacco law training to local law enforcement personnel. Training includes providing booklets that present liquor control and tobacco laws and elements of making cases on various liquor control and tobacco law violations.

Summary

In recent years the division has streamlined the liquor application process, begun exforcing the youth access tobacco laws, modernized revenue collections and enhanced the professionalism of personnel. Greater information is provided to the public, liquor and tobacco industry and local law enforcement to achieve an unprecedented level of efficiency and cost-effectiveness for Missouri citizens.

Since its inception in 1931, the Missouri State Highway Patrol has evolved from a highway patrolling force to a full service law enforcement agency with its main emphasis remaining on traffic safety. The Patrol's original force, established by the enactment of Chapter 43, RSMo, was 55 officers and a handful of civilians. Today, there are 1,053 uniformed officers, 94 of whom are assigned to the Gaming Division, and 1,072 civilians in the Missouri State Highway Patrol. The Patrol is responsible not only for law enforcement on our state's highways, but also motor vehicle and commercial vehicle inspections, driver's license examinations, criminal investigations, criminal laboratory analysis and research, public education on safety issues, and more.

The Missouri State Highway Patrol is nationally known for the success of its drug interdiction program. Because of its central location in the United States and its major interstates, Missouri has become a crossroad for the distribution of drugs. Programs such as Operation Cash Crop, the BAD WEED hotline, the methamphetamine hotline, and the drug-trained canine unit make the Patrol's drug interdiction program a success. In 2002, the Patrol's drug interdiction program resulted in the seizure of over 9,200 pounds of marijuana, 289 pounds of cocaine, and 68 pounds of methamphetamine in addition to quantities of other illegal drugs such as heroin. In 2002, 2,725 methamphetamine investigations were conducted, leading to the seizure of 1,036 clandestine methamphetamine laboratories.

Missouri's Automated Fingerprint Identification System (AFIS) is maintained and operated at the Patrol's Criminal Records and Identification Division. The system houses over 1,000,000 ten-prints. The system allows for the comparison of a set of fingerprints to the 1,000,000+ tenprints on file in a matter of minutes. The system can also compare a latent fingerprint from a crime scene to the 10,000,000+ fingerprints in the system (10 fingers per person) as well as to the other unsolved latents housed in the system. AFIS has proven to be an exceptional identification tool for law enforcement agencies throughout the state in identifying and tracking criminals, identifying persons assuming another's identity, identifying persons who were at a crime scene, and identifying deceased persons found without identification.

The Missouri State Highway Patrol became a partner in the Midwestern Drugfire System in 1996. Drugfire is a computerized database that compares expended firearms cartridges allowing law enforcement officers to compare evidence from shootings not only within the same jurisdiction, but also throughout the state of Missouri and in the states participating in this system.

The Missouri State Highway Patrol's Training Division is state's training center for Drug Abuse Resistance Education (D.A.R.E.). In this capacity, the Patrol is serving as the statewide coordinator for D.A.R.E. taught by law enforcement officers in Missouri.

In October 1997, the Patrol activated three major crash investigation teams including a total of six officers. In August 1998, three officers were added to the existing teams. In March 1999, a fourth team was created, bringing the total number of officers assigned to 12. The office locations of Higginsville, Jackson, Wentzville, and Springfield were chosen as the best sites in which to serve the main population of the state. The teams were formed in an effort to bring the Patrol to a higher level of expertise and reporting in the field of accident investigation. In 2002, approximately 219 full reconstructions were completed.

These are just a few of the programs that the Patrol has been tasked by the state to ensure the safety of the citizens of Missouri. During its first 43 years, the Patrol answered directly to the governor; however, during the government reorganization of 1974, it was placed under the Department of Public Safety.

The superintendent commands the Patrol, with the help of an assistant superintendent who is second-in-command. A captain commands each of the nine troops and answers to one of the five majors that make up the superintendent's staff. The Public Information and Education Division prepares news releases, arranges press conferences, creates brochures, and disseminates information to the news media and the general public. The division coordinates the Patrol's statewide traffic safety education program and is responsible for the Safety Education Center (Patrol museum) open to the public Monday-Friday (except holidays) from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. In 1998, the division debuted the Mobile Safety Education Center. This 40-foot Fifth Wheel Trailer attends large fairs, educational seminars, trade shows, etc. taking the Patrol's safety message to the public.

In 1997, the position of Legal Counsel was created. The Patrol's legal counsel is an advisor to the superintendent and his staff.

The Crime Laboratory Division analyzes evidence found at the scene of crimes throughout the state. Crime laboratories in Jefferson City, Macon, Park Hills, St. Joseph, Springfield, and Willow Springs provide services to local law enforcement agencies at no cost. The Crime Laboratory was initially accredited by the American Society of Crime Laboratory Directors Laboratory Accreditation Board in 1985. It has undergone re-accreditation inspections in 1990, 1995, and 2000.

The Division of Drug and Crime Control provides criminal investigators specializing in the investigation of narcotics, criminal intelligence, explosives disposal, field investigations, lottery enforcement, missing persons, and motor vehicle theft to assist various criminal justice agencies—federal, state, and local—throughout the state.

The Governor's Security Division provides protection for the governor and first family. The division also provides security to the lieutenant governor, at his request when acting as governor, as well as to visiting governors and other dignitaries.

Gaming Division members perform background investigations on gaming boat operators and upper-level management and enforce Gaming Commission rules/regulations and state laws on Missouri riverboats. Each operating riverboat must have at least one Gaming Division officer on board during all operating hours. The division also regulates bingo in Missouri performing background checks on suppliers for bingo operations and enforcing state laws regarding the game.

In addition to operating the radio network, the division members receive calls and walk-in visits from the public, staffing the "desk officer" positions assigned to uniformed Patrol members until the mid-1990s. This division communicates critical, time-sensitive information received and disseminated by radio to officers on patrol, and communicates and coordinates traffic-safety and criminal apprehension activities with other law enforcement jurisdictions on a statewide basis.

The division operates a computer assisted dispatch system and is provided near instantaneous access to nationwide criminal justice information via the Missouri Uniform Law Enforcement Systems (MULES), the National Criminal Information Center (NCIC), and other criminal justice databases. All Patrol communications equipment is purchased, installed, and maintained by the Communications Division, with radio repair facilities located at General Headquarters and each troop headquarters. The division also conducts training and certification on operation of the MULES system for other law enforcement agency personnel.

The Patrol's Criminal Records and Identification Division (CRID) was officially designated by the Legislature in 1987, as the Central Repository of criminal history records for Missouri. Section 43.500 RSMo made reporting criminal history actions to the Central Repository mandatory for all police officers, prosecutors, clerks of courts, and corrections facilities in Missouri. The Criminal Records and Identification Division disseminates criminal history record information through the Missouri Uniform Law Enforcement System (MULES) for criminal justice agencies, and disseminates criminal record information to the public by mail or at the criminal records public window at General Headquarters. The Central Repository is the single point of contact for criminal history information exchanged between Missouri and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI).

The Information Systems Division (ISD) manages information technology solutions and telecommunications services for the Patrol and the Department of Public Safety. The division manages data repositories for wanted/missing persons, stolen property, criminal records, traffic accident and arrest records, drug and alcohol offender records, and other related criminal justice information. ISD also supports the criminal justice network and application systems that deliver this information to local, state, and federal agencies connected to the network. This network includes connections to the National Crime Information Center, the National Law Enforcement Telecommunications System, the National Crime Information Bureau, the Missouri Department of Revenue, and other regional justice systems.

The Traffic Division is comprised of accident records, alcohol/drug offense records, and fatal accident reporting system. The accident records section maintains traffic records for the Patrol and the statewide traffic accident records system. The alcohol/drug offense records section maintains a computerized listing of all persons convicted in Missouri courts for driving while intoxicated. This section also contains the Uniform Complaint and Summons audit unit. History

In 1959, legislation was enacted to create the Missouri Boat Commission. The purpose of the commission was to make the waters of the state safe for boating and other water-related activities through law enforcement, registration, inspection and educational programs. In 1974, the Omnibus State Reorganization Act transferred the Missouri Boat Commission to the Department of Public Safety, and the agency was named the Division of Water Safety. In 1989, the agency name was changed to the Missouri State Water Patrol. Since 1959, the authorized number of patrol officers has grown from eight to 85 highly trained professionals.

The Missouri State Water Patrol is a statewide law enforcement agency specializing in the regulation of waterways and boating safety. They operate in a quasi-military fashion with authority being delegated by rank. The commissioner is appointed by the governor and holds the rank of colonel. The commissioner determines policy for the water patrol. Second in command and assistant to the commissioner is the field services commander, who holds the rank of major. The commander of field services is responsible for supervision of all field activities and operations of the water patrol. The state is divided into six districts with a captain in charge of each district. District captains are responsible for supervision of all field activities in their respective districts. Patrol officers in each district are responsible for carrying out the policies of the commissioner.

Mandated Programs

Pursuant to RSMo 306.124, the Missouri State Water Patrol is responsible for the uniform marking of the waterways in the State of Missouri through placement of aids to navigation and regulatory markers. Applications for buoys must be submitted to MSWP, at which time a public hearing is scheduled and notice of the hearing is published. Results of an investigation conducted by an MSWP officer of the affected area as well as testimony from the hearing are provided to the Commissioner, who approves or disapproves the application.

RSMo 306.130 authorizes regattas, motorboats and other watercraft races, marine parades, tournaments, parasail operations and exhibitions on waters of this state after determining that an event will not create conditions of excessive danger for the participants, observers and operators of other watercraft nor unduly disrupt navigation. An application for permission to hold an event must be filed with the MSWP prior to the event.

In accordance with RSMo 301.560, Water Patrol Officers perform marine dealer inspections subsequent to an application for licensure as a boat manufacturer or boat dealer.

To address boating and water safety, the Missouri State Water Patrol administers a safe boating course. This water safety education program is directed toward Missouri children in the elementary and secondary school systems. Programs are taught by water patrol officers during the winter months, primarily November through March. The goal is to teach water safety to future boaters while in a stable classroom environment. It is believed that knowledge and awareness from educational programs, in conjunction with law enforcement, have reduced injury and fatality rates associated with water-related accidents.

In Missouri the number of boats and the acreage of recreational waters they use have increased significantly in past years. Recreational waters have increased to approximately 1 million acres and 8,322 miles of shoreline. This figure includes the major lakes of Missouri and the Missouri and Mississippi rivers. As of December 2002, there were 335,849 boats registered in Missouri. The number of boats using Missouri waterways also includes approximately 200,000 watercraft not requiring registration and an additional 30,000 out-of-state watercraft.

In 1993, 283 boating accidents were reported with 23 fatalities resulting from those accidents and an additional 29 drownings that were non-boating related. In 2002, there were 333 boating accidents reported, with 20 fatalities and an additional 24 drownings reported. Although the total number of accidents was higher statewide in 2002 than in 1993, the ratio of accidents compared to total traffic actually dropped, as did the actual fatalities and drownings.

In addition to patrolling the state's recreational waters and enforcing state law, the Water Patrol provides many other services to the public. Services include public safety exhibits; boat safety inspection stations; boat and motor verifications; investigation of complaints, navigational obstructions, boating and water-related accidents and criminal activities; drug eradication and coordinated enforcement activities with other agencies; and recovery of accident victims.

Coordinated activities

Flood Duty—The Water Patrol provides rescue and recovery assistance during flooding conditions. The division works closely with the State Emergency Management Agency and various other state and local agencies requesting flood assistance. The Water Patrol is one of the few agencies with the proper equipment and experience to work in flooding conditions.

Dive Team—Every year, members of the Water Patrol dive team conduct an average of 45 dive operations to recover drowning or boating accident victims, or to recover criminal evidence in felony cases. Dive team members are fully trained for dive operations in lakes, rivers, ponds, etc. In 2002, Water Patrol divers logged 1,400 hours for dive operations.

Assistance—As a police agency, the Water Patrol often assists other agencies in emergency situations. These situations include searches for fugitives and missing persons, felony criminal investigations, drug eradication and specialized enforcement activities. The Water Patrol offers specialized departmental resources including personnel for these coordinated activities.

Adjutant General

The adjutant general is appointed by the governor and serves as administrative head of the Missouri Army and Air National Guard, the military establishment of the state. Under the direction of the governor and the director of Public Safety, the adjutant general supervises the National Guard in the state.

State and Federal Mission

The Missouri National Guard has once again met the challenges of military service to the state and the nation. Recently, all of Missouri's citizen-soldiers of the Army and Air Guard have answered the call of duty to provide peace on the home front and abroad.

The Missouri National Guard serves our state by providing trained personnel and unit equipment capable of deploying to protect life and property, and to maintain peace, order and public safety.

The Guard's federal mission supports the U.S. military by providing highly trained soldiers with modern equipment to support federal mobilizations.

BRIG. GEN. DENNIS SHULL
Adjutant General
Office of Adjutant General

Force Strength in Missouri

Approximately 11,000 men and women serve in the Army and Air National Guard units based in approximately 65 communities across the state.

These soldiers and airmen are trained in hundreds of specialized and high-tech skills, most with direct application to civilian work and professions.

The Missouri Guard also employs approximately 450 state civilian employees located throughout the state. These employees provide essential day-to-day services required to support our soldiers.

Organization and Funding

The National Guard Bureau, a joint agency of the U.S. Army and Air Force, provides peacetime federal oversight of National Guard units. While the governor commands the Missouri Guard, most costs are paid with federal funds.

Federal funding provides approximately 95 percent of the annual expenditures of the Guard. This includes the payroll for soldiers and airmen during training as well as times of federal military service. Salaries for full-time soldiers and support staff are also provided to ensure the readiness of the Guard.

Guard soldiers and airmen provide a significant economic resource to our state and local communities. The Missouri Guard injected almost $700 million into Missouri's economy during the fiscal years of 2000 and 2001.

State funding is required to augment a variety of Missouri National Guard services for the citizens of the state. State funding is also utilized in the event of a call-up for state duty in response to a natural disaster or emergency.

With its ability to perform federal or state duty as the need arises, the Guard is the most capable and cost effective of all the components of the nation's armed forces. Although National Guard units and members can perform federal duty in the same manner as members of the active and reserve components of the military—only National Guard units have the constitutional responsibility to serve on home front during emergencies.

Activity after 9/11/01

In the aftermath of the attack on the U.S. on September 11th, 2001, the Missouri National Guard has been an active deterrent to terrorist activities in Missouri and around the world. In response, the citizen-soldiers of the Missouri Guard answered the call to fight terrorism many times.

- September 11, 2001, the Missouri Air National Guard was put on alert in response to the airline hijackings in New York City, Washington, D.C., and rural Pennsylvania. St. Louis' 131st Fighter Wing fielded alert aircraft and conducted around-the-clock combat air patrols over the state.

- September 2001, the Missouri Army National Guard responded to the president's request for increased airport security. Approximately 300 Missouri soldiers participated in the heightened airport security mission at eight airport locations throughout the state. This all-volunteer force helped augment existing airport police, as well as providing reassurance to the traveling public relative to the safety of air travel. This mission extended through May 2002.

- In October 2001, the Missouri National Guard's 1138th and 1139th Military Police Companies deployed for nearly one year of active military service. The 1138th of West Plains and Springfield answered the call to duty in three days. They served a vital role providing security at Fort Leonard Wood.

- Also in October 2001, the 1139th of Harrisonville and Moberly deployed to guard Department of Defense munitions plants throughout the Midwest.

- In November 2001, the 2175th Military Police Company of St. Clair alerted 30 soldiers who quickly established heightened security for nuclear power plants in central Missouri.

- In January 2002, the Missouri National Guard sent over 300 soldiers from the 110th and 1140th Engineer Battalions, and the 935th Division Aviation Support Battalion to support security efforts at the 2002 Winter Olympics in Utah.

- In February 2002, the Missouri Air National Guard's 241st Air Traffic Control Squadron of St. Joseph deployed for military service in Afghanistan. The 241st was one of the first units on site and helped direct air traffic in Afghanistan. Many other Missouri Air Guard soldiers served worldwide in Operation Enduring Freedom.

- In July 2002, the 735th Main Support Battalion of Popular Bluff and other communities in south Missouri provided more than 350 soldiers to augment security at Fair St. Louis at the request of the National Park Service.

- In late 2002 and throughout 2003, the Missouri National Guard began the first of many mobilizations to support Operation Enduring Freedom and to protect the home front for Operation Noble Eagle.

- In December 2002, the 205th Area Support Medical Battalion of Kansas City deployed to Qatar. Over the next six months, the Missouri Guard mobilized more than 2,500 soldiers and airmen—more than double the amount called up for Desert Storm in 1990.

- In February 2003, almost 1,200 soldiers were deployed in one week—making it the largest single deployment in Missouri since World War II.

- In March 2003, over 600 soldiers from the 203rd Engineer Battalion, of Joplin and other communities in southwest Missouri, were mobilized to support the war effort.

State Emergency Duty

In addition to providing essential support to the U.S. military, the Guard also serves as Missouri's force in times of disaster and emergency.

State duty is performed under orders of the governor, who serves as the Guard's peacetime commander in chief.

Recent state duty missions include: recovery from the statewide ice storm in February 2002, security for Governor Mel Carnahan Memorial Service in Jefferson City in November 2000, and assistance for the community of Union after a flash flood in the spring of 2000.

For many years, the Missouri National Guard has provided local communities with disaster recovery in the aftermath of floods, tornadoes, ice storms and other times of need when time was critical in order to save lives and property.

Other National Guard Initiatives

The Missouri National Guard provides services and facilitates initiatives that benefit other parts of the world.

Task Force Alaska is a joint service project led by the Missouri Guard in coordination with all branches of the military. The task force's goal is to build a 14-mile roadway across a remote Alaskan island, located near Ketchikan.

Task Force Alaska's engineering project is well underway and will benefit a Native American tribe that still resides on this isolated island. This project also provides National Guard and other military engineers with hands-on training opportunities.

The State Partnership Program links the National Guard of 33 states, two territories and the District of Columbia with 34 countries worldwide, providing support to strengthen democracies and improve regional stability around the world.

Missouri's State Partnership Program is an exchange of information and ideas with the people the Republic of Panama. During the 2001-2002 fiscal year, emphasis was placed on aviation, surface maintenance and logistics.

National Guard Community Programs

The Missouri National Guard is also involved in several initiatives working to make Missouri a better place to live.

The Funeral Honors Program began in 1999. At that time, Missouri became one of the first states in the nation to provide military funeral honors for all honorably discharged veterans of the Armed Forces.

As of April 2003, the Military Funeral Honors Program has coordinated over 25,000 funeral services for Missouri veterans, providing these veterans a final tribute on behalf of a grateful nation for their service. Likewise, over 175 Veterans' Service Organizations participate in the program and provide representatives to approximately 65 percent of the veterans' services.

The World War II Veterans Award Recognition Program has provided more than 38,000 awards to veterans since the program's inception. These veterans have been honored with the World War II Appreciation award.

In addition, over 4,000 state veterans who participated in the June 6, 1944, "D-Day" invasion of Europe have been awarded the Jubilee of Liberty medal.

Recently enacted legislation extended the application time for these awards, allowing spouses to apply posthumously and expanding the eligibility dates of World War II awards.

The Missouri National Guard's Counterdrug Program is part of a coalition of local law enforcement, government and community agencies involved in a multi-front battle against drugs and drug related violence. The program focuses on both reduction of drug sources and reduction of drug demand through education.

The Missouri National Guard brings $2.2 million in resources as a partner in community efforts to reach Missouri's at-risk youth and support law enforcement agencies.

The 7th Civil Support Team is a federally-funded Missouri National Guard unit which aids civil authorities in response to local and regional terrorism threats that involve weapons of mass destruction. Established in 1999, the 7th CST was one of the first 10 full-time teams in the U.S.

Members of the 7th CST receive over 800 hours of specialized training to respond to incidents involving the hostile use of chemical, biological or radiological agents. Unit members are on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week prepared to respond when needed. The unit is based at Fort Leonard Wood.

Camp Wonderland is a collaborative program conducted by the Missouri Air and Army National Guard in conjunction with the Missouri Department of Health and other civic organizations. This unique program provides mentally and or physically challenged citizens with an annual summer camp at the Lake of the Ozarks.

The Missouri National Guard played a vital role in the establishment of Camp Wonderland and continues to provide volunteers and resources today.

The State Emergency Management Agency (SEMA) coordinates and develops the State Emergency Operations Plan, oversees Missouri's disaster preparedness programs and coordinates the state's response operations for all types of large-scale emergencies anywhere in the state.

Agency History: The Agency began in the 1950s when State Civil Defense programs operated as a high national priority to protect U.S. citizens from the potential threat of enemy attack. By the mid 1960s, the civil defense organizations focused on domestic emergencies such as floods, tornadoes and other state hazards. In 1967, the Missouri State Legislature moved Civil Defense and the Adjutant General's Office to the Department of Public Safety. The name of the office was then changed from the Division of Civil Defense to the Disaster Planning and Operations Office.

During the 1984 legislative session, the office name was changed to the State Emergency Management Agency (SEMA) to better reflect its current and expanding role. SEMA continues to operate in the Missouri Adjutant General's Office, within the Department of Public Safety. The Missouri Adjutant General appoints the SEMA director.

SEMA's mission is to protect the lives and property of all Missourians when major disasters threaten public safety in any city, county or region. These disasters include major snow and ice storms, floods, tornadoes and severe weather, earthquakes, hazardous material incidents, nuclear power plant accidents, radiological or biological hazards, and now terrorism.

SEMA updates the State Emergency Operations Plan, which directs the actions of Missouri state government departments and agencies in the event of any emergency requiring use of state resources and personnel.

State Emergency Operations Center

SEMA and the State Emergency Operations Center (SEOC) are located at the Missouri Army

National Guard Ike Skelton Training Site, east of Jefferson City. SEMA has a state-of-the-art facility and technical equipment to direct Missouri's disaster emergency response and recovery operations. The SEOC enables all state agencies to come together during an emergency, gather information from local jurisdictions and quickly respond to the disaster.

Coordination of Preparedness Activities

Emergency preparedness is, by law, a joint responsibility of federal, state and local governments. SEMA coordinates emergency preparedness activities among these groups and both supervises and administers a number of key, federally funded programs to boost Missouri's level of preparedness for specific emergency preparedness categories. These programs are designed to help local governments across the state in such areas as natural disaster planning and assistance, earthquake preparedness, floodplain management and mitigation, emergency management assistance, radiological protection, public warning, training and education. SEMA's training courses in emergency preparedness are made available to schools, the public, first responders, local emergency management agencies, and local officials.

Homeland Security/Terrorism Activities

Prior to September 11, 2001, SEMA developed a Terrorism Annex to Missouri's All Hazard Emergency Operations Plan, worked with local jurisdictions on terrorism training, exercises and developing local terrorism plans. In 1999, SEMA was the point-of-contact for the Department of Justice Terrorism Equipment Grants.

On September 11, 2001, within hours of the attacks on the Pentagon and the Twin Towers in New York City, Governor Holden held a press conference from the floor of the State Emergency Operations Center. The SEOC operated 24/7 for a week. On September 26, 2001, Governor Holden appointed Tim Daniel as the Missouri Homeland Security Advisor. SEMA Director Jerry B. Uhlmann was a member of the Public-Private Missouri Homeland Security Task Force, which made security recommendations to the Governor in a report on January 2002. SEMA Director Jerry B. Uhlmann is a member of the Missouri Security Council, which continues to make security recommendations to Governor Holden.

Since 1999, SEMA remains the point-of-contact for the State Homeland Security Grant Program formerly known as the Department of Justice Domestic Preparedness Grants. Money from the grants has been used to purchase personal protective gear, terrorism detection equipment and decontamination units for 28 Homeland Security Response Teams across Missouri. The current federal grant has added categories for the purchase of explosive device mitigation, search and rescue equipment and limited medical supplies.

SEMA is the point-of-contact for Federal Emergency Management Grants for State and Local terrorism planning assessments, State and Local Emergency Operations Center evaluations, the Community Emergency Response Team (CERT) local programs and the Citizens Corps Programs.

State and Federal Disaster Assistance

When a disaster overwhelms the ability of local communities to respond and/or recover, the governor may declare a state of emergency for the impacted area. This action triggers the use of additional state government resources to augment the needs of local governments in combating disaster conditions.

In extreme circumstances, the governor makes a request to the President for a federal disaster declaration in accordance with Public Law 93-288. If issued by the President, such a declaration makes a wide variety of state-federal assistance programs available to individuals, families and businesses adversely affected by the disaster. In these cases, SEMA issues emergency information to the affected public and administers key resources and financial assistance to benefit affected jurisdictions and individuals in declared counties. Disaster assistance includes the state-federal Individual and Household Program (IHP), which help disaster victims meet basic needs and expenses. Other federal programs such as low interest loans from the Small Business Administration are also available. Federal Public Assistance funds may be available for local governments to help repair disaster damaged roads, bridges and other critical infrastructure. Communities may be eligible for cost effective mitigation projects which help prevent similar damages in the future.

Disaster Declarations

February 2002, Missouri received a Presidential Declaration for an ice storm affecting 43 Missouri counties. The Individuals and Household Program helped families who suffered damages while the Small Business Administration assisted businesses. Damages to Public Infrastructure and Debris Removal projects incurred an estimated cost of $64.5 million.

April 2002, Missouri received a Presidential Declaration for severe weather and tornadoes. In May, the declaration was expanded to include flooding. In all, 79 counties were affected by the natural disasters. The Individuals and Households Program helped families who suffered damages while the Small Business Administration assisted businesses. Damages to Public Infrastructure and Debris Removal projects incurred an estimated cost of $51.3 million.

As of February 2003, 15 Hazard Mitigation projects were approved as a result of the ice storm and severe weather/flooding federal disaster declarations. The projects include: NOAA Transmitters, buried underground service wires, community buyouts and a pilot Tornado Saferoom. Additional cost effective hazard mitigation projects will continue to be approved by FEMA.

In 2003, the Department of Natural Resources enacted the State's Drought Plan when the potential for drinking water shortfalls became a threat to some Missouri counties.

Floodplain and Mitigation

The hazard mitigation efforts of the agency are designed to make the next disaster event as uneventful as possible. The voluntary flood buyout program following the Great Flood of 1993 remains the agency's most successful hazard mitigation project. On a much smaller scale, the voluntary flood buyout program continues with the assistance of yearly grant programs offered through the agency to local communities. To date, buyouts have been conducted in 77 jurisdictions removing approximately 4,500 residential properties from the Floodplain.

Renewed emphasis on pre-disaster hazard mitigation continues. Repetitively declared counties develop an All-Hazard Mitigation Plan that identifies mitigation projects to reduce future disaster damages. The agency offers extensive training and technical assistance for mitigation planning and other pre-disaster mitigation activities.

NOAA Weather Transmitter Mitigation Project - The mitigation program works closely with the National Weather Service, FEMA and the Missouri Electric Cooperatives to provide NOAA weather radio alert coverage for the entire state. This partnership has placed over 30 transmitters to give Missouri almost 100% advance severe weather warning coverage.

Coordinating the National Flood Insurance Program is a key mitigation program. SEMA works with 570 NFIP participating communities. SEMA helps with floodplain compliance issues and offers extensive training for local floodplain managers, insurance agents, and elected officials. Unfortunately there are 78 communities that have not yet joined the program.

The threat of an earthquake along the New Madrid Seismic Fault requires creative and systematic earthquake mitigation activities. Public education and awareness continue to be the backbone of the earthquake mitigation efforts. The earthquake program is now looking at both structural and non-structural projects, increased insurance participation, and increased emphasis on mandatory seismic codes.

Volunteer Agency Coordinator

SEMA's volunteer agency coordinator has a federal counterpart in FEMA. During a disaster, SEMA's volunteer agency coordinator works with state, private and volunteer agencies to coordinate disaster services for Missouri citizens. The coordinator provides technical assistance to FEMA, state and local emergency management officials and local long-term recovery committees on disaster survivor needs. The coordinator is the point-of-contact for the Missouri Disaster Recovery Partnership and the Missouri Voluntary Organizations Active in Disaster.

SAVE Coalition

The SAVE (Structural Assessment Visual Evaluation) Coalition was implemented by RSMo 44.023 to establish a building inspection program for disaster events such as earthquakes. The Coalition organizes and trains architects, engineers, building inspectors and skilled construction industry personnel to serve as volunteer building inspectors following disasters. When requested, these volunteers are available to work for up to three days inspecting buildings to determine if they are safe for occupation. During this service period, the volunteer inspectors are immune from liability for acts committed in the performance of their official emergency duties, except in case of willful misconduct or gross negligence. Incidental expenses incurred by the inspectors are paid by the local jurisdictions they serve. SAVE Coalition members are required to pass the ATC-20 structural evaluation course prior to receiving SAVE credentials and performing inspections.

Missouri Seismic Safety Commission

The Missouri Seismic Safety Commission was established by RSMo 44.227 to initiate a comprehensive program to help prepare Missouri for responding to major earthquakes. One of the commission's initial duties was to prepare a report, or Strategic Plan, for reducing earthquake hazards in the state. This Strategic Plan listed 38 recommendations for improving earthquake preparedness, mitigation, response and recovery. The commission periodically presents a formal report to Missouri's Governor and Legislature, explaining earthquake issues and reviewing progress made on the 38 original recommendations.

The Missouri Emergency Response Commission implements the federal Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act and related Missouri laws. These laws pertain to the storage of hazardous chemicals. The commission designates and supports the Local Emergency Planning Committees, reviews hazardous chemical contingency plans, assists local officials with training for chemical emergencies, collects information on toxic and hazardous storage and makes this information available to the public. The MERC administers the SARA Title III funds for HAZMAT training to local public sector employees and the Chemical Emergency Preparedness funds for planning and training for LEPCs to carry out their responsibilities designated under EPCRA and RSMo 292.600-625.

House Bill 816 established the Advisory Committee for 911 Service Oversight in 1997. The committee adopts 911 standards, helps communities with 911 issues, reviews and comments on proposed 911 legislation. The committee's priorities include 911 compliance issues, reviewing the rule on 911 service repairs, and becoming a resource for communities either developing a 911 system or for more mature 911 systems who want help upgrading their service.

The Missouri Veterans Commission is vested with the responsibility of representing all Missouri veterans, ensuring their needs are met and defending the entitlements of those who have served their country with honor and distinction. This is accomplished through programs and services funded by the state and federal government as well as private and corporate contributions.

Our Vision

In recognition of the sacrifices made by veterans in service to our country, the Missouri Veterans Commission will lead in the provision of high quality, holistic health care to disabled veterans, in providing a final resting place with honor and compassion, and in facilitating timely, quality benefits administration.

Our History

The State Federal Soldier's Home was established in 1896 by the Women's Relief Corps Soldiers' Home Association, and was deeded to the state of Missouri in 1897. Its original purpose was to provide care to aging Missourians who had fought for the Union in the Civil War. In 1931, the state legislature, at the request of organized veterans groups, created the Office of State Service Officer for the purpose of counseling and assisting veterans of WWI and earlier conflicts whose service connected disabilities were becoming manifest and for whom numerous benefits were being made available through the newly established Veterans Administration.

In 1974, the Omnibus Reorganization Act placed the Division of Veterans' Affairs within the Department of Social Services. The State Federal Soldier's Home and Office of State Service Officer remained separate entities until the Reorganization Act of 1974 combined the two, renaming the Home and establishing the Division of Veterans' Affairs within the Department of Social Services.

As defined in the Omnibus State Reorganization Act of 1974, the Division of Veterans' Affairs, as provided in Chapter 42, RSMo, 1978, was transferred from the Department of Social Services to the Department of Public Safety, Office of the Adjutant General, by a Type I transfer.

Executive order 81-18 (February 1981) passed at the First Regular Session of the Eighty-First General Assembly, put this law into effect in September of 1981.

On August 28, 1989, the Division of Veterans' Affairs was replaced by the establishment of the Missouri Veterans' Commission as a Type III Transfer. Chapter 42, RSMo governs the commission' s operation as a state agency. The commission is comprised of five veterans appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the Senate.

The Commissioners then appoint an Executive Director, who implements commission policies and is responsible for statewide management of veterans programs. The Executive Director reports regularly to the commission concerning all aspects of program operations through quarterly commission meetings.

The mission of the Service to Veterans Program is dedicated to providing services and benefits assistance to veterans and their families in a timely and compassionate manner. Further, the program seeks to facilitate a proper and effective partnership with the federal Department of Veterans Affairs, other government agencies, veteran's service and other organizations.

Through the Service to Veterans Program, the Missouri Veterans' Commission provides counseling and assistance to veterans throughout the state in filing claims for benefits from the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs. Veterans Service Offices are located in almost every county of the state to make services available to veterans close to their homes.

Information concerning locations and phone numbers of Veterans Service Officers may be found in the local telephone directory under 'Missouri, State of, Veterans' Commission', by contacting Commission Headquarters at (573) 751-3779, or through the 'Service Office Directory' at the Commission's web site: www.mvc.state.mo.us.

Automation of the entire Service to Veterans Program allows each Veterans Service Officer improved access to the DVA system, expediting the filing of claims and delivery of benefits to veterans. Veterans Service Officers are thoroughly trained and knowledgeable in all areas of veterans' benefits, including compensation, pension, education, burial, and widow's benefits. Information and counseling regarding medical eligibility, VA Home Loan Guaranty, and other benefits, including those offered by the state, may also be obtained from the a Veterans Service Officer as well.

Veterans Home Program

The Missouri Veterans' Commission currently operates and maintains seven long-term skilled nursing care facilities with 1,153 beds for veterans of the state. Currently, the commission is building a 200-bed replacement facility in Mt. Vernon and adding a 100-bed dementia unit to the facility in St. Louis. Both of the additions are targeted for completion and occupancy during the summer of 2003. Once these additions are complete, the total number of available beds will be 1,350.

The mission of the Missouri Veterans Home Program through inspired employees, the Missouri Veterans Homes daily enrich the lives of the veterans we care for through the provisions of quality healthcare in a state-of-the-art facility.

Veterans in need of nursing home care may seek admission to a Missouri Veterans Home by filing an application with the home of their choice. Prospective residents may obtain application forms from any Missouri Veterans' Home, from a Missouri Veterans Service Officer (phone book listing under 'Missouri, State of, Veterans Commission'), or by contacting the Missouri Veterans' Commission Headquarters at (573) 751-3779. Home applications may also be downloaded from MVC website at: www.mvc.state.mo.us

The Missouri Gaming Commission was established in 1993 by the 87th General Assembly as specified by Chapter 313 RSMo. The commission assumed the responsibility for regulating charitable games on July 1, 1994.

The commission is composed of five members, no more than three of who may be members of the same political party. Commission members are appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of three years. Pursuant to statute, the overall membership of the commission reflects experience in law enforcement, civil and criminal investigation and financial principles.

The commission's role is to monitor gaming related activities to ensure that criminal elements do not infiltrate licensed gaming operations. In addition, the commission works to protect the public by ensuring that games are conducted fairly, according to their rules and with full disclosure.

As a state regulatory agency, the commission and its staff hold themselves to the highest ethical and professional standards and strive to conduct all business in a manner that is in the public interest and maintains the public trust. Pursuant to statute, a strict code of ethics has been adopted prohibiting conflicts of interest and certain ex parte communications.

The key regulatory responsibilities of the commission are:

- To conduct thorough background investigations on all key persons involved in gaming operations including substantial owners, management personnel, key operational employees and suppliers;

- To thoroughly investigate the finances of applicants and their key persons to determine if they have the financial resources and responsibility to meet their proposed obligations;

- To screen all occupational licensees including dealers, slot attendants, food and beverage servers, security and surveillance personnel and all other employees who have access to the gaming area and investigate the background of each to ensure that the personnel operating the casino are of sufficient character to maintain the integrity of Missouri gaming;
- To photograph and fingerprint each employee so as to maintain a complete and accurate database of gaming personnel;
- To assign appropriate staff to each gaming operation to be present at all times when gaming is conducted. Enforcement agents are charged with ensuring that gaming is conducted in accordance with the Missouri gaming statute, the rules and regulations of the commission and the licensee's own internal controls;
- To ensure that the safety of the passengers is guarded, to conduct investigations of suspected wrongdoing and to receive complaints from customers;
- To review and audit the finances and compliance of the gaming operation through the combined use of commission staff, independent public accounting firms and internal casino audit staff that are retained by the licensee and approved by the commission;
- To monitor the financial integrity of gaming operators to ensure that Missouri's financial interests are protected;
- To assess qualifications of organizations applying for a charity gaming license, conduct required background investigations, conduct audits, collect taxes, conduct necessary investigations and maintain all records related to charity games.

Pursuant to statute, the commission has entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with the Missouri State Highway Patrol to perform background investigations and to provide enforcement personnel on the boats and for bingo enforcement.

The Corporate Securities and Finance Section is responsible for financial and transactional investigations, tax collection and enforcement, casino audit examinations, financial analysis and economic analysis of the casino industry. The Tax Collection unit of the Corporate Securities and Finance Section is responsible for the collection of the gross receipts tax and admissions tax assessed upon casino licensees by statute. These examinations concentrate on compliance with financial internal controls established to ensure that the tax owed to the state is secure.

Enforcement Section

To ensure uniform, centralized, professional and thorough investigations in regulatory enforcement, a division of the Missouri State Highway Patrol has been assigned to the commission. A Memorandam of Understanding between the commission and the patrol sets forth the unit's responsibilities. As of May 2003, there were 94 officers in the unit. The officers handle the major portions of the commission's investigative and enforcement duties. Officers serve as gaming agents on the riverboat gaming facilities and are on duty whenever gaming is conducted on the properties. Officers also serve on commission investigative teams and conduct licensing background investigations, regulatory compliance investigations, public compliant investigations and commission staff background investigations.

Additionally, this section is responsible for investigating financial matters and transactions related to applicants and licensees, such as examining income taxes and tracing sources of funds to make certain organized crime connections are not present. This unit also investigates legal actions involving financial matters, such as commercial litigation, white-collar criminal actions and violations of anti-money laundering laws.

Legal Section

The commission's Legal Section is responsible for handling various legal matters that must be dealt with by the commission on a daily basis and for drafting and working with the rules and regulations of the commission. In addition, the legal section manages an administrative hearing docket for appeals of license denials and disciplinary actions. On November 6, 1984, Missouri voters authorized the General Assembly, by Article III, Section 39(b) of the Missouri Constitution, to pass legislation establishing a Missouri state lottery.

The governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoints the five-member commission. No more than three members may be of the same political party. Commissioners receive no salary and serve three-year terms.

The commission supervises the lottery by issuing rules and appointing a director. The director runs the day-to-day business of the lottery, including hiring employees, issuing licenses and negotiating contracts with vendors.

The attorney general provides legal services for the lottery; the state auditor reviews operations by conducting audits. The legislation also details the operation of the lottery, including distribution of lottery monies, conflicts of interest, who may play the lottery, criminal penalties and taxation of lottery winnings.

organized into four major sections: Litigation, Administrative Hearings, Investigations and State Technical Assistance Team.

The Litigation section represents the divisions of DSS before administrative tribunals and in the circuit and appellate courts. These cases relate to reimbursement of and sanctioning of Medicaid providers and collection of liens for medical services in personal injury cases and claims in probate estates on behalf of the Division of Medical Services; judicial review of administrative child support orders on behalf of the Division of Child Support Enforcement; placement of children under the care of the Division of Family Services (DFS), proceedings involving child abuse and neglect, licensure and revocation of foster homes, minor guardianships, permanency planning for children including, as appropriate, termination of parental rights and income maintenance issues all for DFS; legal services to the Division of Youth Services in restoring young people to leading lives as productive citizens; and, for all divisions, advice on contracts, personnel matters, and the reviewing and implementation of administrative regulations.

The Administrative Hearings is comprised of hearing officers who conduct hearings related to child support enforcement and public benefits under Chapters 208, 454, 536 and 660, RSMo. [Administrative hearings include enforcing, establishing and modifying child support orders, to ensure the obligation to provide child support is current and reflects the parents' ability to provide financial and medical support to their children in accordance with Supreme Court Rule 88.01.] The Administrative Hearings Section also provides hearings to thousands of public assistance applicants and recipients as mandated by federal law. These due process hearings provide the forum for determining whether the denial or termination of public benefits was justified.

The Investigation Section is divided into four units: Welfare Investigations Unit, Medicaid Investigations Unit, Claims and Restitution Unit and General Assignment Unit. The Welfare Investigations Unit investigates fraud and abuse committed by public assistance recipients. The Medicaid Investigations Unit investigates fraud and abuse committed by recipients against Medicaid providers. Also, the Medicaid Unit is responsible for Medicaid provider compliance investigations including overpayments, denial of enrollments and program sanctions. The Claims and Restitution Unit operates and manages the Claims Accounting Restitution System (CARS). The CARS system tracks the establishment and collection efforts in all claims in the public assistance programs administered by DSS. This unit processes in excess of 40,000 recoupments and 100,000 hot line and mail requests annually. The General Assignment Unit conducts criminal, personnel and internal investigations; investigates allegations of discrimination and civil rights violations; locates persons owing monies to DSS, as well as other state agencies, identifies their resources, initiates collection actions, monitors payments and takes appropriate action on delinquent accounts; conducts background investigations and associated research in support of DSS investigations, as well as background checks on prospective DSS employees.

Missouri's State Technical Assistance Team (STAT) has evolved from implementing Missouri's Child Fatality Review Program (CFRP) in 1992 to providing comprehensive integrated services to the entire child protection community. From data collection and interpretation, to prevention facilitation, training and complex criminal investigations, STAT provides support and expertise to professionals responsible for the protection of children at risk.

Missouri's Child Support Enforcement Program began in 1977 under an executive order, and on August 15, 1986, the Division of Child Support Enforcement (DCSE) was created by statute. DCSE has the responsibility for operating the Child Support Enforcement Program pursuant to Title IV-D of the federal Social Security Act (originally adopted as P.L. 93-647) and Chapter 454 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri (RSMo).

General responsibilities

DCSE's responsibilities include locating parents, establishing paternity, establishing child and medical support orders, monitoring and enforcing compliance with child and medical support orders, reviewing and modifying support orders and distributing support collections.

DCSE's customers come from several sources. When a custodial parent receives public assistance, Division of Family Services (DFS) staff make a referral to DCSE and provide appropriate forms and relevant information. DCSE collects child support on behalf of families receiving public assistance not only to eliminate their dependence on assistance programs, but also to reimburse the state for the benefits provided to these families.

In addition, individuals not receiving public assistance benefits may apply for DCSE's services. To request an application, they may contact any DCSE office or call DCSE's toll-free number.

GARY BAILEY
Director, Division of Child Support Enforcement

Organization

The program is administered from DCSE's central office located in Jefferson City. Central office staff provide support functions with the bulk of the division's responsibilities carried out in twenty-two field offices across the state. One of the field offices pursues support for children who live in other states but whose noncustodial parents live in Missouri. This office is the central registry for all incoming interstate referrals.

The field offices are comprised of supervisory, investigative, clerical and legal staff. In addition, local prosecuting attorneys and circuit court clerks assist the division with its child support responsibilities. The majority of prosecutors in Missouri provide legal support (e.g., the filing of paternity actions, criminal nonsupport and enforcement actions) for cases DCSE staff refer to them. Circuit court clerks support DCSE staff by filing legal documents and providing copies of documents already on file.

Pursuant to Section 454.530, RSMo, DCSE operates the state disbursement unit known as the Family Support Payment Center. The Family Support Payment Center, located in Jefferson City, receives and disburses support on behalf of families. The Family Support Payment Center forwards to the state, collections received for families receiving public assistance. When a family is not receiving public assistance, the Family Support Payment Center sends payments directly to the family. DCSE collected $446 million in state fiscal year 2002.

Funding

Federal funds, available under the Social Security Act, assist state and local jurisdictions in financing the costs of program operations. Currently, the federal matching rate is 66 percent. In addition to federal funds, the state is entitled to retain approximately 34 percent of the collections it receives for families who receive public assistance.

All counties that have entered into a cooperative agreement with DCSE receive reimbursement for their child support activities, as provided by state and federal law. Generally, counties are reimbursed at the 66 percent rate for personnel and operating expenses. DCSE also assists the counties by passing through to the counties the federal incentives it earns.

Location

The first step in the case-processing sequence is locating the noncustodial parent. Often, the custodial parent provides sufficient information to allow DCSE staff to locate the noncustodial parent and his or her place of employment. If the noncustodial parent's location is unknown, DCSE may use a number of resources to find that parent.

Section 454.440, RSMo, requires other agencies, as well as private entities, to cooperate with DCSE for the purpose of locating and determining financial resources of a parent.

Section 285.300, RSMo, requires all Missouri employers to report newly hired employees to the Department of Revenue (DOR). DOR forwards the information to DCSE. This law helps ensure that DCSE has the most current employment information available on noncustodial parents who owe child support.

DCSE also commonly queries and conducts data matches with databases maintained by other state and federal agencies to obtain location, income and asset information. The Expanded Federal Parent Locator Services, a computerized national network, provides DCSE with Social Security numbers, addresses, employer and wage information for noncustodial parents.

Establishment

Before DCSE can establish a support order, a legal relationship must exist between the child and the noncustodial parent.

Pursuant to Section 210.822.1(1), RSMo, when a child is born during a marriage, the husband is presumed to be the child's natural father. If a child was born out of wedlock, paternity can be established if the parents complete a voluntary paternity acknowledgment pursuant to Section 210.823, RSMo. If either the mother or alleged father requests a genetic test to determine paternity, DCSE will arrange for the necessary test. If necessary, DCSE may enter an order requiring that the child, the mother or an alleged father submit to a genetic test for the purpose of determining paternity. A person who fails to comply with such an order is subject to civil contempt and/or license suspension actions. If the genetic test shows there is a 98 percent or greater probability that an alleged father is the child's biological father, a presumption of paternity is established pursuant to Section 210.822.1(4).

Once the father-child relationship is established, DCSE attempts to establish a support order under the authority of Chapter 454, RSMo. DCSE staff serve the parents with a notice of intent to establish an ongoing support order, which may include both child support and medical support. If a child receives public assistance, DCSE may, in addition to establishing an ongoing support order, attempt to recoup public assistance benefits paid on the child's behalf prior to the date of the notice. The amount of public assistance benefits to be recouped is based on the noncustodial parent's ability to pay child support. Upon receipt of the notice, the parents have the opportunity to discuss the terms of the proposed order with DCSE staff or request an administrative hearing to contest the terms. Depending on the parents' response, the director will enter a consent order or a default order, or staff will refer the case to an administrative hearing officer for a hearing. The hearing officer will render a decision on the support issue. DCSE files its administrative orders with the circuit court, at which time they have the full force and effect of an order signed by a judge.

When administrative procedures are inappropriate, DCSE staff refer cases to the appropriate prosecuting attorney. The prosecuting attorney may use the judicial process to determine paternity and obtain a support order.

Enforcement

When a judicial or administrative order is established, DCSE staff monitor the noncustodial parent's compliance and take appropriate enforcement action if he or she does not comply. DCSE has a number of enforcement actions at its disposal, many of which can be initiated without a court's involvement. Such administrative actions include income withholding, real and personal property liens, state and federal income tax refund interceptions, unemployment compensation and workers' compensation benefits interceptions, license suspension and referrals to consumer reporting agencies. When administrative procedures are inappropriate, DCSE staff refer cases to prosecuting attorneys for the filing of civil or criminal actions.

Review and Modification

Family and financial circumstances change over time. To ensure child support awards are in line with changing circumstances, DCSE conducts periodic reviews of child support orders in accordance with Section 454.400, RSMo. On non-assistance cases, DCSE only conducts reviews if requested. On a public assistance or Medicaid-only case, DCSE either initiates a review on its own or at either parent's request.

When conducting a review of an order that is three years old or older, DCSE will modify the order if the amount in the current order differs by 20 percent or more from the amount that would be awarded in accordance with Supreme Court Rule 88.01. DCSE will conduct a review of an order that is less than three years old if the party requesting the review shows a substantial change in circumstances has occurred.

DCSE initiates a modification of an administrative order by serving a motion for modification upon the parents. The parents have the right to an administrative hearing if a consent agreement cannot be reached. When modifying child support orders established by a court (e.g., child support awards established as part of a dissolution of marriage), DCSE serves the parents with a motion to modify pursuant to Section 454.496, RSMo. The parents may consent to the new child support amount, request an administrative hearing or default by not responding to the motion. An administrative order modifying a judicial order must be filed with and approved by the court that entered the original order before it becomes effective. The judge can approve the order or set the matter for trial de novo. DCSE, at its discretion, may also use the judicial process to modify a judicial order.

Parents' Fair Share

Parents' Fair Share is a noncustodial parent program that helps participants gain self-sufficiency. The program includes assessments and referrals for educational, employment needs and supportive services through a network of community resources.

The Division of Family Services (DFS) was established in 1974. The division is responsible for the administration of these programs and services: temporary assistance (TA), formerly AFDC; direct client support; child care subsidy; children's services (adoption, child abuse/neglect, foster care, licensing of child placing facilities, preventive services, residential treatment, family-centered services, intensive in-home services, domestic violence, interstate placement of children, independent living and others); commodities distribution; food stamps; Community Services Block Grant; general relief; low-income home energy assistance; refugee assistance; rehabilitation services to the blind and the visually impaired; medical assistance; supplemental nursing care, and MC+.

DENISE CROSS
Director
Division of Family Services

Administrative Structure

The Division of Family Services is administered by a director appointed by the director of the Department of Social Services. The division maintains an office in each county and in St. Louis.

Public Assistance Programs

The determination of an individual's financial need is basic to the granting of TANF, child care subsidy, food stamps, blind pension, general relief, supplemental aid to the blind, medical assistance, nursing care benefits and MC+. The division has a legal requirement to consider all facts and circumstances in determining eligibility for public assistance, including the applicants' earning capacity, income and resources from whatever source received. The amount of benefits, when added to all other income, resources, support and maintenance, shall provide such person with reasonable subsistence. If the applicant is not found to be in need, assistance is denied.

In order to administer this provision equitably, the division has established a consolidated standard expense for each person included in the budget and for each item judged to be a necessary expense. Available income is deducted from this total and the difference represents the amount the individual is eligible to receive.

The federal Social Security Amendments of 1972 provided that the adult assistance programs of old age assistance, permanent and total disability and aid to the blind be taken over by the Social Security Administration on January 1, 1974. The primary intent was to make a nationwide, uniform minimum payment to eligible adults and the handicapped. The law further provided that any state may or, in some instances, must supplement federal payments. The division administers this state supplementation program in Missouri.

Temporary Assistance

Temporary Assistance makes cash grants on behalf of needy children who have been deprived of parental support and who are living in homes maintained by parents or close relatives. This program provides temporary financial assistance for a period of time, up to five years, while the adult transitions to self-sufficiency.

The program provides education, skill training, community work experience and employment assistance to prepare individuals for employment enabling children to be cared for in their own homes. Each participant is screened to obtain the individual's work and educational background, supportive service needs, and employment goals. The participant signs a self-sufficiency pact outlining activities necessary to meet their employment goals. The participant is referred to education, training or job search activities consistent with employment goals. Additional services to support the individual transitioning to work may include case management, childcare payments, transportation allowances and work-related expense payments.

During FY02, a total of $140 million was paid to Temporary Assistance families, $20 million in state funds and $120 million in federal funds. There was a monthly average of 48,992 families, involving 131,291 persons, received payments which average $236 per family.

Grandparents as Foster Parents

The Grandparents As Foster Parents program is administered under the temporary assistance program. It provides case assistance and other benefits and services to grandparents or other relatives who have either applied for or obtained legal guardianship or legal custody of their related child(ren) under the age of 18 if providing the assistance would help to maintain the child(ren) in a permanent home. Payments are provided at 75% of those provided for unrelated licensed foster parents. In FY02, an average of 1,371 families with 2,472 children received payments under this program. The average payment per child was $205.

Child care subsidy

The child care subsidy program provides families with financial assistance in meeting child care expenses, enabling adults to work, attend school or participate in job training programs. The program also has provisions for care due to a parent's medical incapacitation or a child's special needs. Eligibility is based on income and the need for care. Parents pay a sliding fee.

Approximately 47,000 children were served in FY02.

MC+

The MC+ program provides healthcare coverage to children under 19, parents, and pregnant women. Family income is compared to the applicable percentage of the federal poverty guidelines. The applicable income limit is dependent on age of the children and the individual's insurance status. MC+ is funded by Medicaid and the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP). In FY02, the program provided coverage to 487,497 children, 14,388 pregnant women and 164,117 parents.

The division also oversees an expanded MC+ program which provides health insurance coverage for eligible uninsured low-income children and parents. Authority for this program is through a waiver of Section 1115 of the Social Security Act and SB 632, signed into law June 1998. This waiver initiative builds on the original MC+ program by focusing on uninsured children and parents leaving welfare for work. The MC+ for Kids program is funded in part by the new federal children's health initiative program from the Balanced Budget Act.

General Relief

The division is also responsible for administering the state's general relief program which provides aid or public relief to unemployable persons. Eligibility for this assistance is dependent upon need and is determined basically in the same manner as are other programs. Most of the payments are made by check to recipients. The maximum monthly payment is $70 a person.

A total of $6.3 million was appropriated for FY02 from state funds for this program; approximately $5,550,000 from state funds and $740,000 from federal funds. The General Assembly appropriated $17.1 million from the blind pension fund for payments during FY02.

Supplemental Aid to the Blind and Blind Pension

The division administers two separate programs for the blind: the supplemental aid to the blind (SAB) program and the state-financed blind pension (BP) program. Under the SAB program, the amount of the monthly grant is $390 minus any supplemental security income (SSI) payment received; under the BP program, a flat monthly payment of $390 per person is made. The programs differ slightly in eligibility requirements. Funds are provided from a Missouri constitutionally established blind pension fund with no matching federal funds.

The General Assembly appropriated $17.1 million from the blind pension fund for payments during FY02.

Supplemental Nursing Care

The supplemental nursing care program in Missouri provides medical services to persons who meet requirements in accordance with standards developed by the division. Certain adults, who are medically eligible and who reside in licensed skilled nursing facilities or intermediate care facilities, may receive monthly cash benefits of up to a maximum of $390. If they live in a licensed residential care facility, they may be eligible for monthly cash benefits of up to $292; or if in a licensed boarding home, they may receive monthly cash benefits of up to $156. In addition, certain other claimants living in or planning to enter licensed skilled nursing homes may be eligible for payments made for their care.

Persons eligible for these cash payments may also qualify to receive a personal needs allowance of $25 per month unless such needs are met by the Department of Mental Health.

The General Assembly appropriated $25.5 million for FY02 from state funds for the supplemental nursing care program.

Medical Assistance

The medical assistance program provides medical services for aged, blind or disabled individuals whose income and resources fail to meet medical needs. An individual must have limited resources. Income is compared to 80% of the federal poverty level. Persons whose income is below this maximum would receive the medical services covered by Missouri. Persons with income above the maximum may gain eligibility for medical services by incurring medical expenses equal to the amount of income which exceeds 80% of the federal poverty level.

In FY02, an average of 150,377 persons per month were eligible to receive medical services under this program.

Food Stamp and Food Distribution Programs

The food stamp program is designed to help low-income families increase their purchasing power for buying food for their families. Depending upon the adjusted income and the number of persons in the household, a family receives a monthly benefit amount. The division is responsible for determining the eligibility of food stamp applicants according to guidelines established by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Applicants for food stamps are served by county family services offices. During federal FY02, $463 million in food stamp benefits were issued to 215,351 households.

The division also administers a number of food distribution programs and has continued involvement in supplying U.S. Department of Agriculture donated foods to summer camps, temporary emergency food assistance programs, charitable institutions and residential child care institutions.

Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP)

The low income home energy assistance program is a federally funded program established in April 1980 with enactment of the Crude Oil Windfall Profits Tax Act. Eligibility for assistance is based on household income and the number of persons residing in the household. Benefit amounts vary based on income, family size, type of fuel utilized as a primary source of home heating and the geographic area of the state in which the program recipient resides. Payments made either to the individual's home heating supplier or directly to the individual are intended to assist him or her in purchasing home heating fuels during the period of November through March of each year.

Community Services Block Grant Program

The community services block grant (CSBG) program is a federally funded program implemented in October 1981 pursuant to enactment of the Community Services Block Grant Act. The CSBG makes funds available to impact causes of six poverty conditions: unemployment, inadequate housing, inadequate education, malnutrition, poor use of income and unmet emergency needs. The program provides for a flexible local partnership of elected public officials, business and civic interests and low-income citizens. The partnership identifies and implements programs within the general areas of community coordination/resource development and family development. CSBG programs are usually operated locally by community action agencies and serve individuals whose family income falls within the official federal poverty guideline.

Children's Services Program

Children's services are provided under federal and state laws to help each eligible child and family attain and maintain a maximum level of personal and social functioning.

The division has a legal mandate to provide services in three areas: child abuse and neglect investigations and family assessments; treatment services to children and families; and licensing activities for child placing agencies.

Child Abuse and Neglect Investigations

The division has responsibility for receiving reports of alleged child abuse or neglect. Upon receipt of a report of alleged abuse or neglect, the division requires that an investigation of the incident be initiated within 24 hours, the primary purpose being to protect the child. Protection of the child may include temporary removal of him or her from the home. The goals of the child abuse and neglect investigation are to assess risk, protect the child from harm, determine if child abuse or neglect occurred as alleged and provide services to the family. The division can replace the investigation process with a family assessment.

Family-centered Services

Treatment services, referred to as family-centered services, are provided in a preventive and protective capacity. These case management services are provided in a protective capacity to families when a "probable cause" determination was made during a child abuse/neglect (CA/N) investigation. Family-centered services provided in a preventive capacity are contingent on the family's willingness to accept services. Services are also offered when an unsubstantiated CA/N investigation or a family assessment detects family problems and such services might prevent abuse or neglect. Families may also receive preventive treatment services due to self-referrals. Services may be provided directly by the DFS social worker and/or purchased on behalf of the family.

The overriding goal of family-centered services is to prevent child abuse or neglect and the possible removal of the children from the home by stabilizing the family and improving family functioning.

Intensive in-home services (family preservation services) is a short-term crisis intervention service aimed at stabilizing the crises which put children at imminent risk of being removed from their homes. Intensive in-home specialists serving small case loads are available to the family 24 hours a day for a period of up to six weeks. The goal of the service is to prevent children from being placed in alternative care, while ensuring that the children are safe in their own home.

Additionally, federal law mandates the provision of services to children and to families or children in alternative care. Such services are directed toward either returning the child to his or her natural parent(s) or placing the child in an alternative permanent setting. The goals of these services are to: prevent further child abuse or neglect; correct family factors which could lead to further child abuse or neglect; and reunite children separated from their families or, when that is not possible, to obtain permanent homes for children through adoption or guardianship.

To achieve its goals, the division employs children's service workers to provide services to eligible children and families. These services are provided through two major components: direct services and purchased services.

Direct Services

The major components of the direct service program are detection, treatment and prevention of child abuse or neglect.

Under the provisions of the Child Abuse and Neglect Law (Sections 210.110, 210.167, RSMo), a "child" is any person under 18 years of age; "abuse" includes both actual and threatened physical injury, sexual or emotional abuse inflicted on a child other than by accidental means by those responsible for his care, custody and control, except that discipline including spanking, administered in a reasonable manner, shall not be construed to be abuse; "neglect" is failure to provide, by those responsible for the care, custody and control of the child, the proper or necessary support, education as required by law, or medical, surgical or any other care necessary for the child's well-being; and "persons responsible for the care, custody and control of the child" include but are not limited to the parents or guardian of a child, other members of the child's household or those persons exercising supervision over a child for any part of a 24-hour day.

Two categories of reporters of child abuse or neglect are established in the law: mandated and permissive. Mandated reporters include physicians, medical examiners, coroners, dentists, chiropractors, optometrists, podiatrists, residents, interns, nurses, hospital and clinic personnel and other health practitioners, psychologists, mental health professionals, social workers, day care center workers or other child care workers, juvenile officers, probation or parole officers, teachers, principals or other school officials, Christian Science practitioners, peace officers or law en-forcement officials or other persons with responsibility for the care of children. Permissive reporters are others who may report when they have reasonable cause to suspect that a child has been or may be subjected to abuse or neglect or who observes a child being subjected to circumstances which would reasonably result in abuse or neglect.

All reporting is done to the central office of the division, which is required to provide toll-free statewide telephone service for reporting purposes (1-800-392-3738). The division is responsible for making investigations or family assessments of all reports and for offering protective services on a multidisciplinary basis in cooperation with the juvenile court and other public and private agencies.

DFS staff provide direct services when utilizing the family-centered services case management model with families in treatment and families whose children are in alternative care settings. The DFS social workers work with the families in assessing service needs and case planning. Actual service delivery may be provided by DFS staff, may be purchased or both.

Alternative care services (Family-centered Out-of-Home Services) are provided to children who are determined by the juvenile court to need care in a setting other than their biological family home. These children participate in a statewide services program which is designed to provide substitute family care or nonfamilial group care. Any one of three types of licensed settings provides alternative care: foster family homes, group facilities and residential treatment facilities. Transitional Living Services and Independent Living may also be utilized for older youth who may not return home and for whom adoption or guardianship is not deemed appropriate.

Child safety and permanency for children is the overriding goal of all services and integrates the principles of permanency planning; reuniting the child with the biological family; and, when this is not possible, finding other permanent family relationships for children.

Families who wish to adopt children who are unable to reunite with the biological family may, in some instances, receive an adoption subsidy payment. This is a statewide program developed to provide financial benefits in the form of a subsidy to encourage potential adoptive parents to adopt and to finance the cost of adopting "special needs" children. Adoption subsidy may be used for any child in adoptive placement who is determined to be a "special needs" child because of a handicapping condition, racial or ethnic minority status, age, social maladjustment or membership in a sibling group.

Purchased Services

Purchased services are available to individuals and families who are receiving family-centered services or in efforts to recruit and maintain resources for permanency. These services are usually provided as a result of a "probable cause" child abuse/neglect report but may also be authorized for children in alternative care, children in adoptive placements and family members receiving preventive treatment services or foster and adoptive services. Purchased services are provided through contracts with both public and private community agencies and play a major role in extending services throughout the state.

Licensing Program

The division inspects and licenses foster care facilities, residential care facilities and child placing agencies. In addition, the licensing staff monitors licensed facilities to assure that the facilities maintain requisite standards, conducts public education programs and consults with facility personnel in the development and implementation of services to the children being served, and residential program development.

Blind and Visually Impaired Services Program

The Rehabilitation Services for the Blind administers six service programs to blind and visually impaired persons: vocational rehabilitation, prevention of blindness, independent living rehabilitation to adults, Older Blind Services, children services, and the Blind Enterprise Program (BEP). Older Blind Services (OBS) assist blind and visually impaired seniors over age 55 to function independently and remain in their homes and communities.

Vocational rehabilitation services are supported by both federal and state funds. Services include diagnosis and evaluation, counseling and guidance, physical and mental restoration, college and other types of vocational training, rehabilitation engineering, job development and job placement and services after employment when needed. All vocational rehabilitation services, some of which are conditional upon financial need of the individual, are to enable a person with visual disabilities to obtain or retain suitable employment.

Prevention of blindness services are funded with state funds. Services are for the purpose of early detection of eye disease that may lead to blindness and, when indicated, providing treatment to eligible persons in order to prevent visual loss. Services include diagnostic examinations, surgery, hospitalization, glasses, prostheses and certain medications that are not available through other sources. Outreach vision screening clinics are conducted in conjunction with schools of ophthalmology in Missouri. The prevention of blindness program conducts glaucoma screening clinics throughout the state. All services, except those available at outreach vision screening and glaucoma screening clinics, are conditional upon the financial need of the individual.

Independent living rehabilitation services for adults are supported by both federal and state funds. Services, many of which are provided to a blind or visually impaired person in his or her home, are for the purpose of enabling that person to function independently in the home and community. Services, some of which are conditional upon financial need of the individual, include diagnosis and evaluation, adjustment to blindness services, alternative techniques in the areas of daily living activities, physical restoration, home-making, communication and orientation to and travel within the home and community.

Independent living rehabilitation services for blind and visually impaired children are supported by both federal and state funds. Services include counseling to the parents of the child, Parents: Families Supportive Services, consultation in development and readiness skills that the child will need in order to enter and succeed in an appropriate educational setting and referral to community resources.

The federal/state Randolph-Sheppard Blind Enterprise Program provides employment opportunities for legally blind persons who have participated in special training and are licensed by the division to manage a vending facility. Located in federal, state and private industry and in rest areas along the interstate highway system, vending facilities range from full food service cafeterias to banks of vending machines.

Rehabilitation Services for the Blind offices are located in Jefferson City, Kansas City, St. Louis, Sikeston and Springfield.

The Division of Medical Services (DMS) was established as a division in 1985. DMS administers the Missouri Medicaid program as authorized through Title XIX of the federal Social Security Act and through state legislation enacted in 1967.

The Division of Medical Services is administered by a director appointed by the director of the Department of Social Services. The division receives professional and technical consultation from a medical care advisory committee and designated subcommittees representing the major disciplines participating in the program. The advisory committee consists of 20 members including the chairs of the Senate Committee on Public Health and Welfare and the House of Representatives Committee on Social Services and Medicaid, a minority member of each committee, no fewer than three physicians licensed to practice in the state, and the director of the Department of Health and Senior Services. Other members of the committee include persons who are active Medicaid providers, representatives of other health professions and representatives of consumer advocacy and recipient interests.

CHRISTINE RACKERS
Director
Division of Medical Services

Missouri Medicaid Program

The Missouri Medicaid program provides medical services to eligible beneficiaries within defined program benefits in somewhat the same way insurance companies provide coverage for their policyholders.

The services provided include those required by the federal government such as hospital and physician services. Also included are optional services such as pharmaceutical and personal care services authorized by the Missouri General Assembly and identified in Section 208.152 of the Missouri Statutes.

The Division of Medical Services administers a mandatory Medicaid managed care program called MC+ managed care for eligible recipients in the eastern, central and western areas of the state. Children, pregnant women, TANF families and children in state custody receive their medical care through managed care organizations, allowing the state to ensure access to health care and control costs at the same time.

The division also oversees an expanded MC+ program which provides health insurance coverage for eligible uninsured low-income children and parents. Authority for this program is through a waiver of Section 1115 of the Social Security Act and SB 632, signed into law June 1998, and reauthorization in 2002. This waiver initiative builds on the original MC+ program by focusing on uninsured children and parents leaving welfare for work.

Medicaid has included specialized services for specific populations within the state by receiving waiver authority from the federal government. Home and community-based waivers for the elderly, certain mentally retarded, developmentally disabled beneficiaries as well as patients with AIDS were obtained and allow the state Medicaid program to pay for otherwise non-covered home care as an alternative to more expensive institutional care. These services are restricted to those beneficiaries who would otherwise require, and whose home care is no more expensive than, institutionalization.

The Medicaid program is jointly funded by state and federal funds. The division's fiscal year 2003 appropriation of over $4.2 billion includes $1.5 billion in state funds and $2.7 billion in federal monies.

The Omnibus Reorganization Act of 1974 created the Division of Youth Services and placed it within the Department of Social Services.

General Responsibilities

Youth judged to be delinquent and in need of rehabilitation and education are committed to the division by the state's juvenile (circuit) courts until approved for return to the community under supervision or discharged.

The division provides an array of services, including institutional care, community-based services, nonresidential services and aftercare supervision. Chapter 219, RSMo outlines the division's responsibility to include prevention of delinquency, incentive subsidy to juvenile courts, consultative and information services to non-DYS agencies upon request and technical assistance to local communities.

Organization

The division is administered by the director who is appointed by the director of the Department of Social Services. The division operates institutions throughout the state, as well as community facilities consisting of group homes, park camps, specialized residential programs and nonresidential community-based programs as well as a case management system. Five regional administrators are responsible for the programs in their geographical areas. Central office personnel, together with the regional administrators, aid the director in planning for the agency as well as setting goals and objectives.

MARK D. STEWARD
Director
Division of Youth Services

Goals and Objectives

The mission of the Division of Youth Services is to protect communities from juvenile offenders and to provide appropriate services to youth in the division's custody and their families. This balanced approach relies on community partnerships for the development and enhancement of services for the prevention of delinquency.

Methods of Treatment

The Division of Youth Services (DYS) forms a unique treatment environment. The youth centers provide highest structure for students in need, while group homes and park camps provide residential settings for youth who can adequately function with supervision in a community environment. Nonresidential services are provided to low-risk youth as a diversion to residential care and as a supplement to aftercare.

Case Management

A case management system has been developed to provide assessment, treatment planning, coordination of services, monitoring and evaluation of the services for youths and their family. A needs and risk assessment helps the case manager determine the most appropriate services for each youth. The assessment takes into account all pertinent factors involving the youth's delinquent history while identifying the general treatment needs.

Each division facility creates an environment which is designed to contribute to positive changes in the student's behavior and attitudes through the provision of group and individualized treatment services, recreation, academic and vocational training. The ultimate goal is to return each youth to his or her home community as a productive, responsible member of society.

Community-based Services

Focusing on more individualized services and delivering programs at the community level, the division has expanded its program design to be more community-based. The program components are:

Intensive Case Monitoring

This service is provided by employees who track a youth's behavior and activities. Trackers also provide support and counseling to the youth when needed. Great effort is made to ensure the matching of similar personalities and interests of youth and the tracker.

Day Treatment

This service provides a structured alternative educational program which includes traditional academic courses: GED classes; career planning; job placement; and community service supported by individual, group and family therapy.

Proctor Care

This specialized alternative living program places a youth in residence with a young adult proctor who serves as a role model.

Family Therapy

DYS family therapists provide counseling to adjudicated and non-adjudicated youth and their families. In addition, the family therapy unit accepts referrals from juvenile courts, child welfare agencies, mental health agencies, schools and other sources. DYS therapists also provide training to other state agency staff and court personnel.

Short-term Programs

Several short-term programs have been established statewide to prepare youth for reentry into the community. These facilities provide residential-based programs to help youth move from traditional residential services into productive community living. Intensive family involvement is required and youth are expected to accomplish specific community goals before release.

Group Home Programs

Group homes provide the least restrictive residential environment. Staff provide 24-hour supervision in a home setting with a capacity for 10 youths. Youth follow a daily schedule with time allowed for interaction with the community (school, jobs and community projects) as well as treatment services within the facility (group, individual and family counseling). Youth in this program can participate in public schools and vocational programs or attend on-site educational programs.

Residential Facilities

Twelve residential facilities provide a moderately structured environment for DYS youth. Three facilities are located at state parks and operated in conjunction with the Department of Natural Resources: Watkins Mill, Camp Avery and Babler Lodge. The remaining nine facilities are Delmina Woods, Fort Bellefontaine, Spanish Lake, Twin Rivers, Sears Youth Center, Sierra Osage, Waverly Youth Center, New Madrid Bend Youth Center, and Gentry Youth Center. The residential program targets youth who cannot function well in the community and require a more structured setting. Many of these youth have participated in repeat property offenses and require continuous structure to mature.

The program divides youth into groups of 10 with 24-hour staff supervision. A traditional school program is provided on-site by full time teachers offering basic education, GED programming and various remedial/special education activities.

Youth in the Watkins Mill, Camp Avery and Babler Lodge facilities spend a portion of their time working on projects to improve and maintain the park grounds.

Secure Care

For those youth who have a history of offenses and require a more structured setting, the division offers programs in secured facilities. Six highly structured, secure care programs provide on-site educational classes, vocational training and recreational activities. These programs target youth with longer offense records that may include crimes against people. The offenders tend to be older and may include youth who have been unsuccessful in community-based programs. Scheduled outings into the community serve the purpose of involving the youth in community-support projects. Secure care programs use a group-treatment approach with individual and family centered services. The educational program contains the broadly classified areas of basic, remedial, special and vocational education. Emphasis is placed on the acquisition of knowledge and skills that will meet the practical needs of each student.

An individual education plan, including both youth goals and staff strategies, is developed for each youth. Parents are encouraged to attend these planning meetings.

Dual Jurisdiction

The division also operates a secure care program in Montgomery City which serves youth sentenced under the dual jurisdiction provisions in Chapter 211.073, RSMo. This alternative sentencing provision allows certified youth to receive an adult and juvenile sentence with a suspended execution of the adult sentence. Treatment and educational services are provided to youth whose length of stay is significantly longer than that of other DYS students.

Aftercare

When youth are ready to return to their community, the division provides services to help them make the smooth transition. Virtually all youth under the DYS care enter the aftercare program upon their return to the community. An assigned case manager ensures support services are provided to help each youth enter and readjust to community living. Support may be of a referral, supervisory or counseling nature. The primary goal of aftercare is to provide supervision and resources to youth to assist them in making a satisfactory community adjustment. This is defined as a youth being able to function in the community without becoming involved in delinquent behavior that could lead the youth into court.

Division of Youth Services Advisory Board

Established in 1974, the Division of Youth Services Advisory Board is charged with the responsibility to advise the director, the legislature and the general public on all matters pertaining to the operation of the division. The 15-member board consists of citizens from across the state who are dedicated to the prevention of delinquency and the containment and rehabilitation of juvenile offenders.

The Missouri Department of Transportation (MoDOT) was created by legislation passed in 1996 that changed the name of the Highway and Transportation Department. That department was formed when voters approved Constitutional Amendment 2 in November 1979 merging the previously separate Highways and Transportation departments.

The department is guided by the Missouri Highways and Transportation Commission, which appoints a department director as chief executive officer. MoDOT General Headquarters is in Jefferson City. The headquarters office provides staff assistance and functional control for the various departmental tasks in 10 geographical districts. Each district contains about 10 percent of the total road mileage in the state highway system. Each district is under the direction of a district engineer, who is in turn responsible for administering all district activities.

The department's mission is taking care of and improving Missouri's transportation system. To accomplish this mission, MoDOT has three major priorities.

- Take better care of what we have
- Finish what we've started
- Build public trust

In January 2003 the Missouri Highways and Transportation Commission selected a funding distribution option that better balances taking care of the state's existing roads and bridges with new highway construction. The plan uses objective criteria including vehicle miles traveled, lane miles, population and employment.

MoDOT spent many months getting opinions from all over the state on how to fairly distribute highway money. Although the commission and department feel it is the best option, it doesn't change the basic problem, which is that there's not enough money to fix the roads the way they ought to be fixed.

The Missouri Department of Transportation will use the new process to allocate nearly $1 billion in road and bridge construction money each year. Some of the money is set aside for required programs such as federal dollars for specific programs and paying back debt from bond financing.

An important new element in this process is the extent of local involvement. A goal from the start was to give communities more influence over how their transportation dollars are spent. In this process, most of the money allocated each year will be reviewed by local officials, who MoDOT will partner with to decide which local projects will be built first.

Improving the condition of Missouri's deteriorating highways is also factored into the new funding-distribution process. With more funding devoted each year to taking care of the state's existing roads, the department should be able to start making the state's highways better.

MoDOT will use the new process as it develops the 2004–2007 construction program. Commitments in the current program will be kept, and projects added in future years would be funded based on the new criteria. Commissioners will review the new process in two years to evaluate its effectiveness and consider improvements.

The department's districts reorganized in late 1996 to provide better customer service. Customer service centers were established in each district and headquarters to provide information, accurate call routing and quick response to customer inquiries. Area engineers coordinate construction and maintenance operations in various areas and provide a quick response to local questions and needs.

Two functional units within headquarters are responsible for bridge design and highway planning for the state. Decisions about local highway construction, maintenance or operations are made at the district level.

Waterways, transit, aviation and railroads are established as units within Multimodal Operations, which reports to the director of planning in General Headquarters. These units carry out the statewide planning for these modes; there are no counterparts in the districts. The Department of Transportation works hard to accomplish its mission to preserve, enhance and support Missouri's transportation systems.

MoDOT is guided by its Long-Range Transportation Direction, which sets the department's direction for the next 20 years. It is a fiscally unconstrained look at what MoDOT would have to do, and the resources that would be needed, to accomplish everything the public expects. It provides the vision and direction for project development activities. As needs are further refined, the most significant projects are includ-

Missouri's State Transportation System

Missouri's Department of Transportation has responsibilities for five major transportation alternatives available to Missourians—highways, aviation, waterways, transit and railroads. Those responsibilities include the total operation of the 32,000-mile state highway system, including highway location, design, construction and maintenance.

In addition, the department cooperates and coordinates with owners and operators of the four other modal systems in the development and improvement of airports, rail facilities, ports and the operational cost of transit systems. The department administers state/federal programs and funds available for these systems.

The Centennial Road Law of 1921 created a system of connected state highways. Under the terms of this law and subsequent legislation and constitutional amendments, more than 32,000 miles of state highways have been constructed and improved through the years. These highways connect large population centers, county seats and small communities within the state.

The main sources of state revenue for the Department of Transportation are motor vehicle fuel taxes, licenses and fees and part of one-half of the motor vehicle sales tax. A small amount of revenue comes from incidental sources such as fees from the sale of blueprints and maps. MoDOT receives approximately 64 percent of highway user fees paid by Missourians.

Voter-approved bond issues of $60 million in 1920 and $75 million in 1928 helped fund early road-building programs. Bond principal and interest were paid from revenues provided by highway users. All road bonds in Missouri were retired on June 15, 1957.

An additional revenue source was created in a special November 6, 1979, state election. Voters approved Amendment 2—a measure providing revenue through reallocation of part of one-half of the motor vehicle sales tax revenue to the department. Of this revenue, 75 percent went to the Department of Transportation. Counties received a 10 percent share and cities received the remaining 15 percent. Amendment 2 also merged the previously separate departments of Highways and Transportation.

Missouri voters approved a road and bridge improvement program on April 7, 1987, that increased the motor fuel tax from 7 to 11 cents per gallon, increased heavy truck registration fees 10 percent and placed a cap on administrative expenses going to other state agencies.

In April 1992, in response to new federal transportation legislation and the need for further transportation improvements, the Missouri Legislature increased the motor fuel tax by 2 cents per gallon in 1992, 1994 and 1996, bringing the motor fuel tax to 17 cents per gallon.

Coupled with this tax increase was a road and bridge improvement program projected to complete hundreds of transportation projects across the state from 1992-2007. In November 1998, the Missouri Highways and Transportation Commission approved a MoDOT staff recommendation to adopt a more realistic 5-Year Statewide Transportation Improvement Program. This short-term highway and bridge construction schedule is designed to meet the high priority needs of Missouri because projecting project costs and funding over an extended period of years is not feasible. Projects from the 1992 plan are included in the STIP and continue to be a framework for transportation improvements.

In 1998, legislation changed the department's structure by creating the position of director to be the chief executive officer. That legislation also mandated MoDOT to prepare a comprehensive annual report to the Legislature that includes finances and road and bridge construction schedules and accomplishments. A chief operating officer and a chief engineer assist the director.

In 2000, the commission was authorized to issue up to $2.25 billion in bonds to accelerate Missouri highway construction. As of July 1, 2003, $907 million in bonds has been sold.

In January 2003, the commission appointed a 12-member Blue Ribbon Panel on Accountability, Credibility and Efficiency. The group will examine and evaluate the commission and Missouri Department of Transportation and recommend ways for them to enhance accountability, credibility and efficiency in the state's transportation operations.

In July 2002, Governor Bob Holden signed legislation implementing an earlier executive order merging into MoDOT programs from four separate agencies serving motor carrier and railroad operators in Missouri.

The department continues to provide exemplary service to Missourians, a fact that's been recognized by several national awards including being named the best cost-estimating transportation department in the country by the Federal Highway Administration. Other awards are for environmental excellence; value engineering and cost savings and the University of Missouri Honor Award for excellence in engineering.

Office of the Chief Counsel

The chief counsel is appointed by the Highways and Transportation Commission (MHTC) to handle legal responsibilities for it and the Missouri Department of Transportation. The chief counsel's office assists MHTC and MoDOT to achieve their strategic and business plans by providing three basic legal services. These include prosecuting and defending litigation; rendering legal advice and opinions; and reviewing and drafting documents. The chief counsel's office is also responsible for eminent domain cases; risk management cases, including general and fleet vehicle liability cases and workers' compensation claims; and administration cases, including construction contract and human resource cases.

Commission Secretary's Office

The Highways and Transportation Commission appoints a commission secretary to provide operational support, clerical assistance and record keeping.

Director's Office

MoDOT's daily operations are under the direction and supervision of the director, who is appointed by the commission.

The MoDOT director is assisted by a chief operating officer, who is responsible for the financial and administrative operations, and a chief engineer, who is in charge of MoDOT's road and bridge design, construction and maintenance activities statewide. The directors of Communications and the Inspector General also report to the department director.

Administrative Areas

MoDOT is divided into eight major administrative areas, each headed by a director who reports to either the director, the chief engineer or the chief operating officer. Reporting to the chief engineer are the directors of planning, operations and project development. The directors of strategic planning, administrative services and the chief financial officer report to the chief operating officer.

Administrative Services

The director of Administrative Services oversees General Services, Human Resources, Equal Opportunity and Motor Carrier Services units.

Equal Opportunity

The Equal Opportunity unit emphasizes affirmative action and the department's efforts to increase workforce diversity.

General Services

The unit provides procurement, fleet and facilities management, travel and mail/freight support as needed by department employees to do their jobs.

Human Resources

Human Resources develops and administers a statewide personnel program to meet department needs. The unit recruits nationally for college graduates for placement throughout the state and for all positions in the General Headquarters in accordance with affirmative action endeavors. Employee development training programs in managerial leadership and various vocational technical areas are conducted or coordinated on an ongoing basis by the Employee Development unit. The unit's mission is to provide managers with the tools, methods and support to improve employee performance and business outcomes to better satisfy MoDOT customers.

Human Resources also develops personnel policy, updates the department's pay system and maintains personnel records for employees.

Motor Carrier Services

The Motor Carrier Services unit was created in July 2002 through legislation consolidating Missouri's motor carrier services and railroad safety programs within MoDOT. Coming into the department were the Division of Motor Carrier and Railroad Safety (MCRS) from the Department of Economic Development, and the Highway Reciprocity Commission from the Department of Revenue. Railroad safety programs were merged into the railroad section of the department's Multi-Modal Operations unit. MoDOT already had a commercial vehicle operation providing permits for overweight and over-dimension vehicles.

Consolidation of motor carrier services will result in better services to the motor carrier industry by providing a central location for all commercial vehicle licensing and permit needs. Commercial vehicles include trucks, tractor-trailers, buses, limousines and others that transport property, passengers, hazardous materials or waste. Consolidation into one state agency also lowers costs to the regulated carriers involved, state government and ultimately, the taxpayers. Prior to consolidation, commercial-vehicle operators had to visit as many as four separate state agencies in Jefferson City to obtain necessary licensing and permit documentation.

Consolidation of services also will result in a common database that's compatible with other agencies serving the trucking industry and will provide better services and better enforcement. The trucking industry will be made safer through faster checks of credentials, safety and drivers' records and better tracking of hazardous waste shipments. It will also help get unsafe operators off the state's highways.

Also coming to MoDOT was the solid and hazardous waste management program dealing with registration and routing of hazardous waste transportation through Missouri. That program previously was a part of the Department of Natural Resources.

Commercial-vehicle operators will benefit from a single point-of-contact for all registration and licensing needs, which allows for more accuracy and better customer service. MoDOT now processes all applications for commercial-vehicle operation, annually registers all Missouri-based motor carriers, and collects and remits International Fuel Tax Agreement taxes received from motor carriers.

Financial Services

The chief financial officer oversees the activities of the Controller and the Employee Benefits, Information Systems, Resource Management and Risk Management units.

Controller

The controller provides administrative support to the Missouri Department of Transportation in accounting, expenditure control and benefits.

As part of accounting and expenditure control, the unit maintains all financial records and reports for MoDOT and for the Highway and Transportation Employees and Highway Patrol Retirement System, and medical and life insurance plans. Functions include federal billing, recording funds received and expended, financial reporting, processing accounts payable and payroll, maintaining cost accounting codes and formulating procedures for document processing. The unit also provides quality assurance measures for these functions.

Employee Benefits

Employee Benefits oversees all aspects of MoDOT's medical and life insurance plan. The unit also provides support to the Highway and Transportation Employees' and Highway Patrol Retirement System. The unit also monitors claims to pinpoint areas of concern and works with actuaries to determine appropriate premium schedules. Benefits administration provides information allowing employees to make informed decisions regarding benefit options. This unit also assists employees with enrollments for the various benefits, such as retirement, health and life insurance, employee assistance program, cafeteria plan and deferred compensation.

Information Systems

Information Systems coordinates the department's information technology activities. It provides computing, data and voice communications services to the department through the operation and maintenance of local and statewide computing data networks and telephone services. The unit operates the department's central and distributed computer facilities and coordinates operations for all remote computing. Unit staff provides applications programming expertise to support the department's engineering, financial, operational and general information needs.

Information Systems provides additional services in the form of Help Desk support, computer training, computer library services, media conversion, client relations activities, technology standards facilitation, computer equipment checkout, Internet access, web publishing, and e-mail accounts. The unit installs computer hardware and software for workstations and trains employees in basic and intermediate-level computer applications. Information Systems uses computer-aided software engineering (CASE) for development of its larger application systems, and integrated development software for its other applications. Integrated desktop products are used to provide primary office automation and workgroup functions.

Strategic Planning and Policy Manager

Resource Management

Resource Management coordinates financial resources and spending plans through forecasting, analysis and training. Resource Management performs financial planning and fiscal analysis, budget, federal aid, and innovative finance administration functions for the department.

Risk Management

This unit administers the Department of Transportation's insurance operations and is responsible for workers' compensation, fleet liability, general liability and property damage recovery. Also included under the risk management umbrella are safety and health programs.

Strategic Planning

The strategic planning unit directs the department's strategic planning and policy efforts.

Chief Engineer

The chief engineer oversees the directors of operations; planning; and project development and the activities of the department's 10 districts.

Operations

The director of operations oversees the Maintenance, Construction and Materials; and Traffic units.

Maintenance

Maintenance of state highways and bridges is the function of this unit. It also establishes broad policy, disseminates best practices and supports field activities by providing quality assurance. Included in these are preservation, upkeep, operation and restoration of roadways, bridges and all appropriate facilities so they remain safe and usable.

Maintenance of bridges requires annual inspections (sometimes using an aerial bucket truck modified to look under bridges and also using underwater diving techniques), painting and major repairs by unit personnel.

Increased highway use continues to demand maintenance of interstate rest areas, rapid and complete removal of snow and ice and many additional services provided by the unit. Maintenance also coordinates a variety of roadside management programs including Adopt-A-Highway and Growing Together.

Construction and Materials

Construction and Materials mission is to efficiently administer highway construction and other contracts to ensure quality highways and materials so the traveling public has a safe, efficient transportation system.

The unit provides technical assistance, new technology implementation and materials quality assurance for the department. It also provides assistance in preparing many specifications for materials used in highway and bridge construction and maintenance as well as continual testing and inspection for all materials used in the highway system.

After a contract has been awarded through the competitive bid process, the work is assigned to project offices located geographically throughout the state. Engineers and technicians assigned to these project offices do field surveying and perform quality control tests on the work performed by contractors to ensure quality construction that improves Missouri's transportation system.

Unit engineers make periodic field inspections to assist field personnel and ensure uniform contract administration over the entire state. Quality assurance reviews of the project offices are performed regularly.

This unit also staffs an equal employment opportunity section, which is responsible for contract administration of the disadvantaged business enterprise (DBE) and minority/female training programs included in federal aid contracts.

Training programs are regularly held to ensure a highly qualified staff of engineers and technicians. Quality improvement teams continuously evaluate construction methods, equipment and techniques to keep abreast of the latest advancements, including a state-of-the-art automated Construction Management System.

The unit provides assistance in preparing many specifications for materials used in highway and bridge construction and maintenance as well as continual testing and inspection for all materials used in the highway system. Testing is done in a modern laboratory in Jefferson City.

Unit personnel analyze pavement designs, roadway foundations, asphaltic concrete and portland cement mixtures, as well as carry out soil and subsurface condition surveys and furnish geotechnical information for the design, construction and maintenance of roads and structures.

Project Operations is highly involved in the national Strategic Highway Research Program (SHRP), an ongoing national research effort to improve highway materials such as concrete and asphalt pavements. By using new technology such as the Superpave bituminous pavement mixture, the department strives to improve the Missouri roadway system for the future.

Personnel also inspect and oversee disposal of hazardous and environmental materials related to highways, ranging from asbestos, underground tanks and lead-based paints to specifications for low volatile organic compound bridge paints and other environmentally-friendly materials.

External Civil Rights Administration

The External Civil Rights Administration unit works to ensure civil rights policies relative to department operations meet standards. The unit is also responsible for implementing the department's Disadvantaged Business Enterprise program to ensure non-discrimination in the award and administration of contracts and to create a level playing field on which DBE firms can compete fairly for federally funded transportation projects.

Traffic

Traffic is responsible for safe and efficient movement of people and goods on the state highway system. This includes supporting signing, striping, traffic signals, lighting, intelligent transportation systems, roadway access and safety management programs throughout the state. The department's central sign manufacturing facility produces more than 120,000 signs annually.

The unit supports the districts and other department units in planning, design, construction and traffic operations. Traffic also coordinates training activities that incorporate traffic-engineering principles in all MoDOT activities. In addition to supporting maintenance, operation and training activities, the unit works with the Motorist Assist Program in the Kansas City and St. Louis areas and administrates the logo services programs throughout the state.

Traffic currently maintains more than 110,000 miles of striping, 800,000 highway signs, 1,800 traffic signals and numerous other traffic control devices. The unit is implementing many new technologies, including snow-plowable raised pavement markers, highly reflective sign materials, video cameras for traffic monitoring and control and light emitting diodes for various applications. These new technologies help increase the efficiency and effectiveness of traffic devices and traffic personnel.

Statewide coordination of the ITS activities is also provided by Traffic. ITS uses advanced technologies and communications to improve the safety and efficiency of MoDOT's transportation facilities. ITS integrates federal, state and local freeway and corridor management systems with traveler information services into a single operating system.

Traffic analyzes and compiles accident data, which is used by district and headquarters units for location studies and project prioritization. A high-accident location listing, a traffic accident statistics manual and a listing of locations with a higher than normal ratio of wet to dry pavement accidents is generated annually for district review. Traffic also administers funding to address low-cost safety improvements in locations identified through these listings. Federal funding is also used to provide traffic engineering services and training for smaller cities and counties that do not have traffic engineering expertise.

STEVE McDONALD
State Traffic Engineer

CONNIE BALDWIN
State Construction and Materials Engineer

JOYCE SHAUL
Director
Highway Safety

Traffic is responsible for preserving the safety and functional integrity of the state highway system through roadway access management. The unit has been designated as the commission's representative in determining the safety and operational implications involved in requests by outside parties for changes in access on roadways. These changes in access include driveway and street connections, levee attachments and grading on interstate right of way. The unit also assists MoDOT districts in complicated or controversial requests for roadways access. Traffic also regulates the movement of vehicles that exceed state statute limitations on length, width, height and weight by issuing permits.

Reducing deaths, injuries, and property damage caused by traffic crashes on Missouri roadways is the mission of the Highway Safety Unit,which was created as a result of the National Highway Safety Act of 1966. Administration of the state's highway safety programs became a MoDOT responsibility in August 2003 when the Division of Highway Safety was merged by Executive Order into the department.

The Highway Safety functional unit concentrates its efforts in three areas that are proven effective in preventing deaths and injuries from motor vehicle crashes—education, enforcement and engineering. The lives saved and injuries prevented save Missouri taxpayers millions of dollars. The unit provides resources and/or technical information to the public, state and local governmental entities, the Legislature, and safety advocates across the state. Funding to support these efforts is provided through federal grants.

This unit is also responsible for the adminsitration and oversight of the Motor Carrier Safety Assistance Program (MCSAP) that was authorized by the Federal Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982. The purpose of this program is to provide assistance to states to reduce deaths, injuries, and property damage caused by traffic crashes involving commercial motor vehicles. This program focuses on the development and implementation of programs to enforce rules, regulations, standards and orders applicable to commercial motor vehicle safety.

The Missouri MCSAP program encompasses the five National Program Elements that include standardized commercial vehicle inspections, traffic enforcement, data collection and reporting, carrier compliance reviews and public information and education. This program also suports initiatives that address commercial vehicle drug interdiction activities and the development of intelligent transportation systems.

Project Development

The Project Development director oversees the activities of the Bridge, Design and Right of Way units.

Bridge

This unit produces structural designs and detailed plans production for all state highway bridges, including cost estimates and site-specific job special provisions.

Design includes preliminary investigation that begins with a detailed and complex study to determine the most suitable type of structure for a given location considering hydraulics, economy, site requirements and aesthetics. The finished product is a set of detailed design plans from which contractors can construct the bridge.

Inspection services are provided by Bridge in fabrication shops around the nation to ensure steel and concrete girders and other materials meet specifications and that the bridges are safe for motorists.

Bridge maintains extensive microfilm files of all plans and design data for bridges, culverts and retaining walls on the state highway system.

The unit also reviews plans for the rehabilitation or replacement of locally owned bridges using federal bridge funds and administers a program for the inspection of locally owned bridges and a program to provide engineering assistance to counties and cities.

Bridges are analyzed to determine their safe load-carrying capacities, and the unit initiates posting of bridges not able to safely carry the state's legal loads. The unit also assists in development of overall strategies for managing Missouri's bridges.

Design

Design prepares all roadway plans and advertises projects for bids. Included in plan preparation are determination of state and/or federal funding for projects; ground surveys and aerial photography; public involvement meetings; consideration of social, environmental and economic factors; detailed plan design; Bid Analysis Management Systems (BAMS), and the development of specifications and cost estimates for highway projects prior to advertising for bids.

In addition, Design is responsible for the department's computer aided drafting and design (CADD) program including support and training. The unit also operates a print shop that produces documents for MoDOT's monthly bid openings.

The unit's responsibilities include the planning processes that identify and evaluate the state's transportation needs and the location, environmental and cultural resource studies required for initial evaluation of proposed projects. Professional engineers, planners, environmental and cultural specialists and other support staff are involved in the comprehensive evaluation and study of transportation projects prior to detailed design.

The unit coordinates with district project teams and regional planning organizations as well as other federal, state and local agencies to facilitate completion of transportation projects. Design's involvement begins with the initial concept, proceeds through the project development process and provides services and support through and beyond construction of transportation facilities.

Environmental and cultural assessments provide clearances allowing the expenditure of federal funds and issuance of permits by regulatory agencies.

Right of Way

Right of Way acquires all realty rights for constructing and improving state highways and related facilities. It provides a relocation assistance and payments program for all persons displaced by the commission's land acquisition activities. It also is responsible for the disposition of right of way no longer needed for state highway purposes and assists the Office of the Chief Counsel in preparing condemnation cases for trial.

Right of Way administers the regulation of outdoor advertising, salvage yard control and scenic byways programs. It also assists the Chief Counsel's office in preparation of outdoor advertising and salvage yard cases.

Planning

The director of planning oversees operations of Multimodal Operations, Research, Development and Technology, and Transportation Planning.

Multimodal Operations

Aviation

The Highways and Transportation Commission is mandated by law to administer an aeronautics program. The law further requires the commission to "encourage, foster and participate with the political subdivisions of this state in the promotion and development of aeronautics." The commission has made this the responsibility of the aviation section, and the section fulfills its obligation in a variety of ways.

The aviation unit administers federal and state grant programs that assist local governments in planning, maintenance and development of existing airports and establishing new facilities. The objective of these grant programs is to provide modern, all-weather airports for safety and to enhance economic development throughout the state.

The aviation unit inspects most of the publicly- and privately-owned airports within the state that are open to the public. These inspections assist airport operators in maintaining safe, efficient facilities. The unit maintains a statewide airport system plan that guides airport development project priorities.

Aviation also produces a free annual aeronautical chart and airport directory for the flying public.

Railroads

The railroads unit is responsible for improving rail freight, passenger service and the railroad/highway grade crossing program in Missouri. Because railroad regulation is primarily a federal government function, the unit monitors federal activity and guards the state's economic interests in relation to bankruptcy and abandonment of railroad facilities. The unit also works to increase and improve rail passenger service in the state.

The railroads unit also provides assistance in all railroad matters affecting the state and is responsible for activities cited in Chapter 680 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri. The railroads unit has attempted to meet its goals and objectives through the preparation and implementation of a state rail plan.

The railroad-highway grade crossing program administers federal funds to improve safety at railroad crossings by implementing grade separations and improving at-grade crossings. The Railroad Safety Program was merged with the Rail Section following consolidation of the state's motor carrier and rail service programs. Railroad safety inspects for track safety, hazardous materials and grade crossing signals. Staff also investigates all grade-crossing fatalities and safety conditions at crossings. It also coordinates the Operation Lifesaver Program to reduce rail grade-crossing accidents.

Transit

The transit unit assists in planning, development and operation of the state's public transit and specialized paratransit systems. This function is carried out through the administration of state and federal programs relating to general public transportation and specific programs for the elderly and disabled.

The Missouri Elderly and Handicapped Transportation Assistance Program provides state financial assistance for nonprofit organizations offering transportation services to the elderly and disabled at below-cost rates. The program has more than 190 grantees that provide approximately 4.3 million trips annually.

Thirty-one small urban and rural general public transit systems receive financial and technical support from the department. These systems have an aggregate operating budget of $13 million, provide three million trips, and travel 12 million vehicle miles per year. The entire state of Missouri is covered by these systems.

MoDOT also provides federal and state assistance to transit systems in "small urbanized" areas of more than 50,000 and less than 200,000 population. Participating cities in Missouri are Columbia, Springfield, St. Joseph and Joplin. The combined fleets number about 75 vehicles. They provide 2,988,000 annual trips with a combined operating budget in excess of $9.5 million annually.

The transit unit purchases approximately 65 vehicles for about 35 grantees annually, using funds allocated to the state through the Federal Transit Administration's Elderly and Persons with Disabilities Capital Assistance Program. The program is open to all areas of the state (rural, urban and urbanized) for nonprofit organizations and qualifying public entities. There are more than 500 active vehicles operated by almost 200 organizations. The active fleet provides more than 800,000 elderly trips and 1.6 million disability trips per year and travels more than 7.5 million miles.

The transit unit also administers the rural transportation assistance program, a training and technical assistance function funded by the Federal Transit Administration. Training courses offered include defensive driving, CPR and first aid, passenger assistance techniques and emergency procedures. Technical assistance is offered in vehicle procurement and maintenance.

The transit unit prepares a statewide application for national discretionary capital assistance. The capital discretionary program has funded about 1,000 vehicles since the state began to receive Section 5309 assistance in Fiscal Year 1993. These vehicles are operating throughout the entire state. Major facilities funded to date include park-n-ride facilities, bus facilities, transitways, personal computers, radio systems, maintenance equipment and miscellaneous equipment.

Waterways

Chapter 68 RSMo allows cities and counties located on or adjacent to navigable waterways to form port authorities and become political subdivisions of the state, upon Highways and Transportation Commission approval.

The waterways unit assists port authorities in developing commerce and to foster local economic development. The unit also promotes the use of Missouri's navigable rivers, assists in capital and administrative funding, acts as an information clearinghouse, and provides technical assistance and represents port interests within industry and government.

Research Development and Technology

This unit coordinates research and development activities within the department. It examines new products, construction methods and Missouri currently serves as one of 21 states leading the way in implementing innovative technology uncovered through the national Strategic Highway Research Program (SHRP). SHRP was established by Congress to improve the performance, durability and safety of the nation's roads.

Transportation Planning

Transportation Planning covers several areas including long-range planning, data administration, systems analysis and planning and programming.

Planning collects, manages and analyzes data to provide a single source of information to support the department's decision processes. Safety, bridge, congestion, traffic and pavement data are linked by using a common reference system to provide relational access as well as a map-based geographic information system (GIS) display of information.

The unit also develops and tracks the 5-Year Statewide Transportation Improvement Program, the department's highway and bridge construction program. The districts' regional planning activities play an important part in the development of this schedule and program.

Transportation Planning also coordinates the department's highway, enhancement, off-system bridge and small urban programming issues as well as provides metropolitan planning organization support. Additionally, the unit provides technical support for the department's project management software.

The long-range planning unit focuses on issues and challenges the department must face in the future. Large issues, not specific projects, are addressed. The unit handles strategic planning, long-range transportation planning, regulation review and compliance and policy development.

Internal Inspector General

The Internal Inspector General is charged with improving efficiency and helping ensure organizational integrity. The goals of the inspector general are to put processes and procedures in place to support organizational integrity and to identify and eliminate problems early, when it's practical to do so.

The unit investigates a wide range of areas from grievances to criminal charges. The unit also manages the activities of employee relations.

The unit oversees investigation of employee grievances and equal opportunity complaints as well as the Audit and Business Analysis unit, which provides internal audit control and assurance.

Employee Relations

Employee Relations administers the department's internal equal employment opportunity, affirmative action programs, and employee grievance system and investigates civil rights complaints. The unit also provides employee counseling services and monitors the department's compliance with anti-discrimination and environmental justice laws.

Communications

MoDOT's Communications unit is responsible for the department's legislative and public outreach programs. The director of communications oversees Public Information and Outreach and Governmental Affairs.

Public Information and Outreach

The prime function of Public Information and Outreach is dissemination of information about the commission, the department and its programs and services. The unit prepares and distributes news releases and also publishes internal and educational publications for employees and their families. The unit also maintains and supervises the department's Internet web site at www.modot.org.

The unit also supervises exhibits, creates multimedia presentations, prepares speeches, displays and brochures, distributes official highway maps, prepares communication and marketing plans and provides quality assurance and support to district public information efforts.

Governmental Affairs

The Governmental Affairs unit directs the department's activities involving state and federal legislation, tracks legislation and provides information to appointed and elected officials.

Missouri Mississippi River Parkway Commission

The Missouri Mississippi River Parkway Commission works to preserve, promote, and enhance the scenic, historic, and recreational resources of the Mississippi River, to foster economic growth in the corridor along the Mississippi, and to develop the national, scenic, and historic parkway known as the Great River Road. The GRR is a river parkway system utilizing existing Mississippi River valley roads while preserving the region's landscape quality. The commission promotes and supports tourism, coordinates domestic and international marketing, facilitates efforts to enhance economic development, and encourages resource awareness. It also works to leverage dollars for highway improvements, recreational trails, bikeways, scenic overlooks and historic preservation along the Mississippi River.

The Great River Road

The development of the Great River Road was authorized by Congress in 1954 after a two-year feasibility study and resulting report, which recommended a plan for a Mississippi River scenic route development by the states through which the route would pass. The plan would be administered by the various state highway departments by improving existing highways to parkway-like standards. It was further recommended that existing highways could be incorporated into a continuous route by interconnecting them where necessary with limited sections of new construction.

The Great River Road provides three major benefits.

(1) It represents a concentrated effort to protect and conserve the natural and cultural environment of the Mississippi River corridor.

(2) The road provides a diverse experience for the vacation traveler and residents that is both enjoyable and educational through the river's major scenic and historic areas.

(3) It provides a positive economic impact on the region serving as an important part of the nation's transportation system. The program has provided important funds for road improvements in a predominately rural section of the nation.

The focus of the MRPC has shifted from solely the designation and construction of the GRR to one encompassing tourism, economic development, and natural/cultural resource awareness. The Great River Road in Missouri is along the Mississippi River, entering Missouri from Iowa on U.S. Route 61. It continues south through Canton and LaGrange to Palmyra, where it shifts to Missouri Route 168 proceeding south to Hannibal. After rejoining U.S. Route 61 north of Hannibal, it continues to downtown Hannibal on U.S. Route 36. It shifts to Missouri Route 79 and continues south along the river through Louisiana, Clarksville, and Elsberry. Where Route 79 ends in St. Peters, the GRR continues east on Interstate Route 70 into St. Charles and to downtown St. Louis. In sight of the Gateway Arch, the GRR shifts to Interstate Route 55 and continues south along the river. South of Crystal City, it rejoins U.S. Route 61 and continues through Ste. Genevieve, Perryville and Cape Girardeau. It continues further south on U.S. Route 61 through Sikeston, New Madrid, Portageville, near Caruthersville, Steele and into Arkansas. A 26-mile portion of the Great River Road, Route 79 between the Ralls County line to Clarksville within Pike County, is the first State Scenic Byway designated in Missouri; it also is a National Scenic Byway known as the Little Dixie Highway of the Great River Road.

Bridge Commissions

There are four bridge commissions assigned to the department. These commissions were created by interstate compacts to plan, construct, maintain and operate bridges and approaches across the Mississippi River within their areas of responsibility. The location of these bridges is to be at points most suitable to the interest of the citizens of Missouri and the other states involved in accordance with the provisions of the federal General Bridge Act of 1946.

Although attached to the Missouri Department of Transportation by law for organizational purposes, the four bridge commissions operate independently of the department.

The commissions are the Missouri-Illinois-Jefferson-Monroe Bridge Commission; the Missouri-Illinois Bridge Commission (Canton); the Missouri-Illinois Bridge Commission (Ste. Genevieve); and the Tennessee-Missouri Bridge Commission.

Although attached to the Missouri Department of Transportation by law for organizational purposes, the St. Louis Area Metro and the Kansas City Area Transportation Authority operate independently of the department.

Metro

707 N. First St.
St. Louis 63102

Origin

Metro of the Missouri-Illinois Metropolitan District was established September 20, 1949, by compact between the states of Missouri and Illinois to make plans for the overall development of the St. Louis metropolitan area and to carry out specific projects. In the following year, the compact was approved by the U.S. Congress and the president. The compact was authorized by legislative acts of the two states and was consented to by the Congress as required by Article I, Section 10, Clause 3 of the Constitution of the United States. Under subsequent legislation the two states agreed to amend the original compact. These changes were approved by the Congress and the president in 1959.

The compact was further amended by Illinois in 1979 and Missouri in 1980 to broaden Metro's powers to include the authority to acquire and operate facilities handling refuse or waste derived resources, fuel or energy.

Scope and functions

The compact created the Missouri-Illinois Metropolitan District to include the city of St. Louis and the counties of St. Louis, St. Charles and Jefferson in Missouri and Madison, Monroe and St. Clair in Illinois. Within this district, Metro has two functions. First, it is empowered to construct, maintain, own and operate specific facilities including bridges, tunnels, airports, wharves, docks, warehouses, grain elevators, passenger transportation facilities and air, water, rail and motor vehicle terminal facilities. Second, it is authorized to make plans for coordination of streets, highways, parking areas, terminals, water supply, sewage and drainage facilities, recreational facilities, land-use patterns and other matters in which joint or coordinated action of the communities within the areas will be generally beneficial.

Metro may charge and collect fees for use of such facilities as it may own, issue bonds upon the security of revenues to be derived from such facilities and receive for its activities any contributions or money appropriated by municipalities, counties, states, the federal government or other agencies. It has no taxing powers.

Administration

A board of 10 commissioners administers Metro, five appointed by the governor of Missouri and five by the governor of Illinois. The commissioners serve overlapping terms of five years each, so that only one term expires each year. The commissioners serve without pay and elect their own officers. A president and chief executive officer appointed by the board of commissioners administers Metro.

Activities and Operating Division

St. Louis Downtown Airport

On November 25, 1964, Metro purchased the closed Parks Metropolitan Airport facility located in Cahokia, Illinois, and reopened it as Bi-State Parks Airport. Funds for the purchase and development of this airfield were provided by grants from the Federal Aviation Administration and the state of Illinois, the sale of bonds and by an advance of $500,000 for debt service on the bonds payable over a seven-year period from the city of St. Louis. These bonds were retired by the agency in January 1993.

An initial $1 million improvement program was completed in 1970 with the opening of a lighted, 5,500-foot jet runway. In 1979, a period of immense expansion activity was begun with construction of a $1.2 million hangar and the completion of an FAA-operated instrument landing system with glideslope and middle marker. Other projects included construction of a new terminal building with administrative offices, construction of an access road, and the preparation for a 200-acre industrial park. These were completed in 1983-84 and construction of a new parallel runway was completed in 1985. In 1989, the primary runway was extended to 7,000 feet.

The airport was renamed St. Louis Downtown Parks Airport in 1984 to emphasize its proximity to St. Louis. The sewer and water infrastructure needed to fully develop the industrial park was installed in 1987 along with an extension to the terminal drive and improved night security lighting.

Several new facility projects were completed during the 1990s including new taxiways, aircraft parking aprons, new auto parking lots and road extensions. In 1999, the Airport's name was further changed to St. Louis Downtown Airport.

St. Louis Downtown Airport is the busiest airport in southern Illinois. It is a full-service airport offering a complete line of general aviation services. A 1997 report by the East-West Gateway Coordinating Council placed the airport's annual economic impact at $135 million. The Airport is home to about 240 aircraft, handles nearly 200,000 operations annually, and employs over 900 people.

During FY 2002, a site was selected as part of the initial phase to construct a new air traffic control tower. The new 138-foot-tall tower will include a 5,000-square-foot support building at the base to house tower administrative staff, back-up power source and other support equipment. Construction is expected to begin in 2004 with completion by 2006.

Gateway Arch Passenger Transportation System, Ticketing and Reservation Center

In the early 1960's, Metro offered, as a public service, to raise the necessary funds to permit construction of the passenger transportation facilities in the Gateway Arch at the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial.

The National Park Service contacted Metro with the opportunity to finance and operate the tram system. On May 14, 1962, Metro entered into a cooperative agreement with the Park Service to provide funds through the sale of $3.3 million in revenue bonds to finance the construction of the tram system and the required heating, ventilation, and air conditioning systems in the Arch legs.

The tram system became operational in the north leg of the Arch in July 1967 and in the south leg in March 1968. The system consists of two trams, two maintenance elevators, stairways, related controls, and power and communication equipment.

By September 1, 1967 the system had transported its 100,000th passenger.

The bonds were paid off ten years ahead of schedule in 1982. In this same year, the first of several amendments to the cooperative agreement were signed, allowing Bi-State to continue to operate the system, expand responsibilities, and establish a debt service reserve fund for a proposed 1,238-car parking facility. The Arch Parking Garage was completed in 1986 financed by $10.2 million in revenue bonds issued by Bi-State.

In 1989 Metro expanded from selling only tram tickets to also ticketing and reservations for the theatre and collection of the National Park Service entrance fee. To better serve guests, a computerized ticketing system was purchased and software developed to expedite the sale of all event tickets and collection of fees.

During the late 1980s and early 1990s, Metro developed, funded, and constructed an underground four- story-high large screen format theatre, known as the Odyssey Theatre, which opened in 1993. The theatre features the first American-made 70mm, 15 pert wide screen projection system.

In 1994, Metro developed a comprehensive Arch facility expansion program. Expansion included doubling the size of the Arch Museum, additional women's restrooms, new staff breakroom, lobby video wall and audio systems, and the creation of a six window, (previously four window) "guest friendly" ticket center. Architectural drawings, funding and construction were provided by Metro. This project was completed during fiscal year 1995.

Revenues in excess of operating expenses and administrative costs are committed to further development of the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial.

Today, nearly one million people ride the tram to the top of the Arch each year. Over 120 staff members work to assist guests with ticketing and expedite tram operations.

Extensive modernization of the Tucker Theatre and Arch lobby area, coupled with the implementation of new services and an aggressive marketing strategy set the stage for enhanced revenue opportunities, increased efficiencies, and explosive growth.

During 1999, Metro and the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial launched a project to add to the tram experience. Calling the project "Journey to the Top," an exhibit has opened in each leg of the Arch that educates and entertains guests as they wait in the queue area to ride the trams.

The south leg, "When Riverboats Ruled" welcomes guests to a morning in the mid 1800s, where they can witness a day on the St. Louis riverfront—a bustling, vibrant area of steamboats and commerce. At the north leg, "Fitting the Final Piece" guests are transported to the memorable morning of October 28, 1965, as the last section of the Arch was lifted into place.

Transit Division

A 1959 study of mass transportation, jointly sponsored by the city and county of St. Louis, recommended a consolidation of all transit facilities in the Missouri portion of the metropolitan area. Subsequently, Metro sponsored a study to review the Illinois portion of the area. This report concluded that the re-establishment of a unified area-wide transit system would be in the interests of all communities in the St. Louis metropolitan area and that Metro was the proper agency to establish such a system.

After approximately 18 months of additional study and negotiation, Metro completed arrangements to purchase the 15 existing privately owned transit systems. The agency also entered into a management contract with Transit Services Corporation for operation of the consolidated transit system. A revenue bond issue of $26,500,000 was successfully sold on March 12, 1963, and on April 1,1963, the agency took title to the physical assets and operating rights of the unified transportation system.

In June 1973, the Missouri General Assembly enacted the transportation sales tax authorizing a one-half cent sales tax in the city of St. Louis and St. Louis County (Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri 1969, Sections 94.600 to 94.655). Later during the same month, the board of aldermen of St. Louis and the St. Louis County Council approved ordinances levying the local tax monies and appropriating those receipts to Bi-State.

In the early 1980s, Illinois authorized the counties served by Metro to levy up to one-fourth of one-cent tax for public transportation purposes.

In the early to mid-80s, a new era in bus maintenance, cleaning and passenger service began as new station-garages were constructed. The new Brentwood, Illinois and DeBaliviere facilities opened, and a new main repair facility opened. The old Belleville, North and South Broadway, and East St. Louis garages were closed. Call-A-Ride and Call-A-Ride Plus van service was initiated, and park-ride lots increased tenfold.

In November 1993, voters in St. Clair County, Ill., approved a one-half cent transportation sales tax. In August 1994, voters in St. Louis city and county also overwhelmingly approved a one-quarter of 1 percent regional transportation sales tax. Revenue from the taxes will be used to support future expansions of MetroLink and improvements to the transit system.

MetroLink

In November 1987, Metro assumed responsibility for the MetroLink light rail system to be built between East St. Louis, Ill. and Lambert-St. Louis International Airport. This initial 17-mile MetroLink line, built on exclusive rights of way, included 19 stations and 31 electrically powered light rail vehicles. It used existing railroad right of way and other public and private property. The capital cost for this initial phase was $464 million, $348 million of which was supplied by the Federal Transit Administration. The remainder was supplied by local jurisdictions. Construction started in early 1990, and passenger service began July 31, 1993.

The next phase of MetroLink to be built was a 17.4-mile extension eastward into St. Clair County, Ill. The extension stretches from the previously existing 5th and Missouri station in East St. Louis to the campus of Southwestern Illinois College in Belleville. It includes 8 new stations and 24 new light rail vehicles, bringing the total number of stations to 27 and the number of light rail vehicles to 65. The length of the MetroLink system is now 34.4 miles.

The capital cost for the St. Clair County MetroLink Extension was $339.2 million, 72 percent of which was supplied by the Federal Transit Administration, and 28 percent of which was supplied from a local sales tax passed by St. Clair County voters in November 1993. Construction started in March 1998, and passenger service began in May 2001.

Construction began in Spring 2001 on an additional 3.5-mile extension from Southwestern Illinois College to Shiloh and Scott Air Force Base. This $75 million extension is being funded from $60 million from the Illinois FIRST program and $15 million from the local sales tax passed in 1993. Passenger service on this extension began on June 23, 2003.

The next phase of MetroLink will be built in Missouri. The Cross County MetroLink Extension, will extend from the existing Forest Park station west through Clayton and south to Shrewsbury. Construction began on this 8.2-mile extension in Spring 2003, with passenger service beginning in 2006.

The Kansas City Area Transportation Authority (KCATA) was formed with the signing of a bi-state compact created by the Missouri and Kansas legislatures on December 28, 1965. The compact was authorized by legislation enacted by the 73rd General Assembly of the state of Missouri (Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri 1969, Sections 238.010 to 238.100) and by the 61st Regular Session of the Kansas Legislature (Sections 12-2524 to 12-2535 Kansas Statutes Annotated). The compact was approved by the 89th Congress (Public Law 89-599) and the bill signed on September 21, 1966, by President Lyndon B. Johnson. Actual transit operation began February 1, 1966.

The compact gives the KCATA responsibility for planning, construction, owning and operating passenger transportation systems and facilities within the seven-county Kansas City metropolitan area. These include the counties of Cass, Clay, Jackson and Platte in Missouri, and Johnson, Leavenworth and Wyandotte in Kansas.

The ATA is governed by a 10-member board of commissioners, five from Kansas and five from Missouri. The five Missouri commissioners are appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to serve four-year terms each. Appointments are made from a panel of three nominees submitted to the governor by each of the county commissioners in Cass, Clay and Platte Counties, by the Jackson County Legislature, and by the mayor of Kansas City. In Kansas, local governments of Johnson, Leavenworth and Wyandotte counties appoint one commissioner each. The remaining Kansas representatives are appointed by the mayor of Kansas City, Kansas. The commissioners select their own officers on an annual basis.

Service Information

The Kansas City Area Transportation Authority offers customers three types of service in the Kansas City area: fixed-route service along 56 routes; Share-A-Fare Paratransit service for the elderly and persons with disabilities, and MetroFlex service, which offers a combination of fixed-route in rush hour and demand-response in mid-day. MetroFlex service is operated in North Kansas City, Lee's Summit, Raytown and three areas of south Kansas City.

The ATA currently uses 185 large buses, 86 small buses and 35 MetroFlex vehicles, all lift-equipped. Metro buses travel nearly 33,000 miles every weekday, providing transportation to approximately 51,000 passengers each weekday.

ATA Labor Force

The ATA has a staff of 829 employees; 506 are Metro bus operators (400 full-time and 106 part-time). The Maintenance Department is the second largest unit with 166 employees. The remaining employees are in Administration, Facilities, Finance, Marketing, Human Resources, Rail Planning, Special Services, Purchasing, Scheduling and Share-A-Fare.

Approximately 701 employees are members of the Amalgamated Transit Union, Local 1287. This includes all Metro bus operations, all Maintenance employees below the position of foreman, the office clerical personnel exclusive of secretaries and supervisors.

Funding

Service or management contracts are maintained with five municipal jurisdictions, the largest being Kansas City, Mo., which contributes approximately 95 percent of the local government-operating subsidy. The city, empowered by the state Legislature, levies a special one-half cent transportation sales tax to support transit operations.

The funds derived from the transportation sales tax have also been used for local participation in a number of capital projects. In most instances, these capital improvements are 80 percent funding by a federal grant from the Federal Transit Administration. The remaining 20 percent comes from the transportation sales tax fund and payments from other local jurisdictions.

In recent years, this process has resulted in several new improvements for the ATA. A new maintenance facility and administration/customer service building was completed in 1991. A downtown transit plaza opened in October 1995.

Business and Community Support

The ATA's Transit Riders' Incentive Plan (TRIP) now boasts 135 member organizations in the Kansas City area that sell and share the cost of monthly bus passes for their employees. This number is more than double what the membership was three years ago. This success is due in part to the program's emergency ride home guarantee, employer interest in enhancing benefit packages and an increasing awareness of the importance of transit to a city the size of Kansas City.

Missouri Voting and Elections

Who Registers to Vote in Missouri?

Citizens living in Missouri must register in order to vote. Any U.S. citizen 17 years and 6 months of age or older, if a Missouri resident, may register and vote except:

- A person who is adjudged incapacitated
- A person who is confined under sentence of imprisonment
- A person who is on probation or parole after conviction of a felony until finally discharged
- A person after conviction of a felony or misdemeanor connected with the right of suffrage (RSMo 115.133)

How do Missourians Register?

Qualified citizens may register in person at the office of their local election authority, by mail, at the driver's license fee office or at participating state agencies. Registration in person is accomplished by filling out registration forms with information on identity, residence and qualifications which are signed and sworn to, then witnessed by the election authority or a designee. (RSMo 115.155)

Registration by mail, at the driver's license fee office or at the participating state agencies requires submission of an application stating qualifications. A verification or rejection of registration is sent by the election authority within seven working days. (RSMo 115.159)

When do Missourians Register?

An unregistered citizen may register to vote whenever local election officials' places of business are open, by requesting an application by mail from the election authority, when renewing a Missouri driver's license or when receiving services from a participating state agency. Special registration sites and dates may be utilized prior to major elections.

The deadline for registration is the fourth Wednesday prior to an election. New Missouri residents may register immediately.

When do Missourians Vote?

In addition to certain special and emergency dates, there are six official election dates in Missouri:

The statutes require that all public elections be held on the general election day, the primary election day, the general municipal election day, the first Tuesday after the first Monday in February or November, or on another day expressly provided by city or county charter, the first Tuesday after the first Monday in June and in nonprimary years on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in August. (RSMo 115.123.1)

The general election day is the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in even-numbered years. The primary election day is the first Tuesday after the first Monday in August in even-numbered years. (RSMo 115.121 (1 & 2))

Elections for cities, towns, villages, school boards and special district officers are held the first Tuesday in April each year, known as "general municipal election day." (RSMo 115.121.3)

A statewide presidential preference primary shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in February of each presidential election year. (RSMo 115.755)

Who Conducts Registration and Elections?

Voter registration and the conduct of elections are the responsibilities of boards of election commissioners in the counties of Clay, Jackson, Platte and St. Louis and in the cities of Kansas City and St. Louis. One county, St. Charles, has a director of elections while the county clerk serves as the election authority in all other counties of the state.

Special Voting Provisions

Handicapped voters and persons prevented from voting because of absence or illness may vote absentee. Persons with permanent disabilities may apply for permanent absentee ballot status by making application with the local election authority and providing a physician's statement as required by law. (RSMo 115.284) Curbside voting is permitted in Missouri, or voters may be transferred to more accessible precincts. Local election officials should be contacted about absentee federal service balloting or "new resident" ballots for residents who arrive after the registration deadline.

When voting, Missourians must show an approved form of identification. (RSMo 115.427)

Elections and Political Parties

Missourians do not register under party affiliation. Hence, at primary elections, voters may choose which "established party" they vote within. Party nominee—and independent candidates—are then listed on the general election ballot.

There are presently three "established political parties" statewide—the Democratic, Republican and Libertarian parties. Persons may seek the nomination of these parties for any elective office from the county level and above. In order to become "established", a party must have received more than two percent of the votes cast statewide for at least one of its candidates. New parties are formed by petition and may exist on the county, district or state level. They must meet the same standard as any other party to remain "established."

In addition to the three statewide established parties, the Green and Progressive parties are also active in some regions of the state.

At the time of primary elections, voters select county committee members of established parties in Missouri. Those committee people, thus elected, have certain duties and responsibilities. They serve, as appropriate, as members of legislative, senatorial, judicial, and congressional district committees. County, district, or state committee members may be called on to fill candidate vacancies on party ballots or to select nominees for special elections from time to time. The state committees are selected, indirectly, by local committee persons. The state committees become especially important when delegates to presidential nominating (national) conventions are being selected.

Constitutional Amendment No. 1

Proposed by the 91st General Assembly (1st Regular Session) HS HJR 11

Shall the Missouri Constitution be amended so that the citizens of the City of St. Louis may amend or revise their present charter to provide for and reorganize their county functions and offices, as provided in the constitution and laws of the state?

The estimated fiscal impact of this proposed measure to state and local governments is $0.

Constitutional Amendment No. 2

Proposed by Initiative Petition

Shall Article XIII of the Missouri Constitution be amended to permit specified firefighters and ambulance personnel, and dispatchers of fire departments, fire districts, ambulance districts and ambulance departments and fire and emergency medical services dispatchers of dispatch agencies, to organize and bargain collectively in good faith with their employers through representatives of their own choosing and to enter into enforceable collective bargaining contracts with their employers concerning wages, hours, binding arbitration and all other terms and conditions of employment, except that nothing in this amendment shall grant to the aforementioned employees the right to strike?

The annual costs to paid fire departments and districts, ambulance departments and districts, and dispatch agencies to enter into collective bargaining contracts are approximately $251,600 to $3,145,000, depending upon the number of entities entering into such contracts.

Full text as submitted by petitioner.

Constitutional Amendment No. 3

Proposed by the 91st General Assembly (2nd Regular Session) HCS SJR 24

Shall Article III, Section 8 of the Missouri Constitution be amended to exclude, from the calculations of term limits for members of the General Assembly, service of less than one-half of a legislative term resulting from a special election held after December 5, 2002?

The estimated fiscal impact of this proposed measure to state and local governments is $0.

Constitutional Amendment No. 4

Proposed by the 91st General Assembly (2nd Regular Session) SS SCS HCS HJR 47

Shall joint boards or commissions, established by contract between political subdivisions, be authorized to own joint projects, to issue bonds in compliance with then applicable requirements of law, the bonds not being indebtedness of the state or political subdivisions, and such activities not to be regulated by the Public Service Commission?

This measure provides potential savings of state revenue and imposes no new costs.

Constitutional Convention

Submitted by Matt Blunt, Secretary of State, State of Missouri

In compliance with the Constitution of Missouri, Article XII, Section 3(a)

Shall there be a convention to revise and amend the Constitution?

Proposition A

Proposed by Initiative Petition

Shall Missouri law be amended to impose an additional tax of 2.75 cents per cigarette (fifty-five cents per pack) and 20 percent on other tobacco products, with the new revenues placed into a Healthy Families Trust Fund to be used for the following purposes: hospital trauma care and emergency preparedness; health care treatment and access, including prescription drug assistance for seniors and health care initiatives for low income citizens, women, minorities and children; life sciences research, including medical research and the proper administration of funds for such research; smoking prevention; and grants for early childhood care and education?

An additional tax of two and three-quarters cents per cigarette and an additional tax of twenty percent of the manufacturer's invoice price for tobacco products other than cigarettes would generate net annual state revenues of approximately $342,636,000; local fiscal impact, if any, is unknown.

Classification of Municipalities

Missouri statutes classify municipalities on the basis of population and limit the form of government options of each classification. The statutes provide that a community may incorporate as a city of the third class, fourth class or village on the basis of the population at the time of incorporation. [1]Once a community is incorporated under a given classification, the municipality does not automatically change classification with a gain or loss of population. A municipality may change classification only when the change is approved by a majority vote of the people.

There are certain forms of government permitted for each classification of municipality. Villages are permitted only one form of government—an elected board of trustees, five in number if the village has less than 2,500 population and nine if more than 2,500 population. Fourth-class cities are permitted to have either the mayor/board of aldermen form or the mayor/city administrator/aldermen form. The board of aldermen may adopt the city administrator form by ordinance, without a vote of the people. Third-class cities are granted greater flexibility with the authority to establish the mayor/council form, the council/manager form, the commission form or the mayor/city administrator/council form. Finally, constitutional charter cities may adopt any form of government that the people approve in the charter.

[1]From 1821 to 1875, the Missouri General Assembly passed special charters for specific cities, until the 1875 Constitution prohibited further granting and amending of special charters. However, seven Missouri municipalities are still operating under special charters granted before 1875. They are Carrollton, Chillicothe, LaGrange, Liberty, Miami, Missouri City and Pleasant Hill. If the voters of these municipalities decide to relinquish their special charters, they will be governed by the appropriate sections of the statutes relevant to their population classification.

Class	Population Requirement	Form of Government	Total Number
Village	less than 500	Board of trustees	260 (approx.)
4th Class	500-2,999	Mayor/board of aldermen	500 (approx.)
		Mayor/city administrator/ alderman
3rd Class	3,000-29,999	Mayor/council Mayor/city administrator/council Council/manager Commission	57
Constitutional Charter	more than 5,000	To be decided by the people	36

DOUG CREWS
Executive Director
Missouri Press Association

The Missouri Press Association is an organization of newspapers in the state.

Organized May 17, 1867, as the Editors and Publishers Association of Missouri, the name was changed in 1877 to the Missouri Press Association. In 1922, the association became a nonprofit corporation; a central office was opened under a field manager whose job it was to travel the state and help newspapers with problems.

The association, located in Columbia, became the fifth press association in the nation to finance its headquarters through member contributions. The MPA's building was completed in 1969.

As a founder of institutions the Missouri Press Association aided in establishment of the Confederate Soldiers' Home, the upbuilding of the normal schools, support of the public school system and advancement of the University of Missouri.

The association founded the State Historical Society of Missouri and today several of its members serve on the board of trustees. Greatest among its achievements is the establishment of the first school of journalism in the world. The Missouri School of Journalism at the University of Missouri–Columbia continues as the largest and foremost school of its kind.

Through their association, the publishers in Missouri have worked to keep the press free and alert, as well as responsible; to keep it financially independent so it can render impartial public service; to understand changing trends in business and in reader needs. Activities of the association include setting up workshops, seminars, conventions, publication of a magazine, The Missouri Press News, supplying information to members, helping newspapers find skilled personnel and assisting with the placement of students graduating from the school of journalism.

On the occasion of its 100th anniversary in 1966, the association re-established the old Saline County Herald newspaper office in historic Arrow Rock and maintains a newspaper equipment museum in connection with it.

The Missouri Press Foundation administers and funds seminars and workshops for newspaper people, supports Newspapers In Education programs, and funds scholarships for Missouri students studying community journalism in college.

Membership in the association is voluntary. All daily newspapers in the state are members and 99 percent of the weekly newspapers are members. In 2003 there were 241 weekly newspaper members and 51 daily members. The association also has 185 associate and sustaining members. It is supported wholly by dues paid by these members.

The central office in Columbia has 9 employees. Doug Crews serves as executive director by appointment of the board of directors.

Show-Me Press Association

(Formerly the Central Missouri Press Association and the Northeast Missouri Press Association)

The Show-Me Press Association was formed in June 1995 at Lake Ozark when members of the Central Missouri Press and Northeast Missouri Press associations voted to combine their organizations with one board of directors.

The Central Missouri Press Association was organized February 27, 1925 in Jefferson City with 30 charter members. Edgar C. Nelson, then owner and publisher of the Boonville Advertiser, was elected the first president. The district extended from St. Louis County on the east to Jackson, Cass and Bates on the west and included all 28 counties through the central part of the state bordering the Missouri River on both sides. In these counties are located the State Capitol, University of Missouri, State Fair Grounds and Central Missouri State University.

The first organizational meeting of Northeast Missouri Publishers was held in Hannibal in November 1889. Meetings of this group were held up to and including 1896, after which the organization disintegrated and was succeeded by the Northeast Missouri Press Association, organized in 1920 in Kirksville with Charles H. Democratic Editors of Missouri

The present Democratic Editors of Missouri organization had its beginning on June 5, 1894. A meeting of leading party editors of that day was held at Pertle Springs, a well-known resort near Warrensburg, and the first Democratic Press Association was formed. H. Martin Williams was the first president and U.A. McBride, then editor of the Warrensburg Journal-Democrat, was chosen secretary. It was named the Democratic Editorial Association of Missouri.

Ten years later a statewide meeting of Democratic editors held in St. Louis changed the name to Missouri Democratic Press Association. George H. Scruton of the Sedalia Democrat was named president and served until his death two years later. For many years John C. Stapel of the Atchison County Mail at Rock Port was president. He was followed by W.C. Hewitt of the Shelby County Herald of Shelbyville.

The interest of Mark R. Holloran, national Democratic committeeman from Missouri, in a strong party press led to the reorganization of the Democratic Editors of Missouri. He appeared at a breakfast meeting during a Missouri Press Association meeting in Kansas City in November, 1955, and called for an active Democratic press in Missouri. An advisory committee was named including: Edgar Blanton, Shelbina Democrat; Kay Miles, Benton County Guide; John Henry Cox, Atchison County Mail; Jess Stewart, Farmington Press; James C. Kirkpatrick, Windsor Review and Ben F. Weir, Nevada Daily Mail. The organizational meeting was held March 24, 1956, in Jefferson City with the following officers elected: President, James C. Missouri Press Women became a charter member of the National Federation of Press Women, established in Chicago, Illinois, in 1937, on the date of the Missouri group's founding. Three Missouri members have served as national presidents: Mrs. Bertha Bless, Weston, founding president of Missouri Press Women; Miss Mattie Dykes, Maryville; and Mrs. Mildred Planthold Michie, St. Clair.

Officers are:

President: Karen Glines, Des Peres;
Vice president: Holly Berthold, Eureka;
Finance director: Karen Zarky, St. Louis;

The state group sponsors a Communicator of Achievement who is honored at the National Federation of Press Women meeting biennially. Each May, the Press Women gives the Virginia Betts White Quest Awards to professional communicators who excel and continuously represent the quest of the highest standards of professional ethics and excellence in the field of communications.

The Missouri Affiliate sponsors annual contests for members and high school journalism students. Categories are specified in all fields of communication. First place winners in the state contest are entered automatically in the national contest. In 1971, MPW received the Sweepstakes Award for earning the most points in the national competition.

In 1999, the St. Louis Chapter, now the Missouri Affiliate, established an educational scholarship fund for a mature woman pursuing a career in journalism, with matching funds provided by the Press Club of metropolitan St. Louis and administered through the Journalism Foundation of metropolitan St. Louis.

The first radio stations to begin operations in Missouri were KMBC-AM (now KMBZ) in Kansas City and WEW-AM in St. Louis. Both signed on the air in 1921. In the following years, the number of radio operations steadily increased as the first FM stations began broadcasting in 1948. Today, we have approximately 250 radio stations serving listeners in Missouri.

Television broadcasting began in 1947 when KSD-TV (now KSDK) in St. Louis signed on the air, followed in 1949 by WDAF-TV in Kansas City. Federal policy suspended the granting of any further licenses until 1953. Shortly after licensing resumed, many additional television stations began operations. There are now approximately 35 commercial and public television stations broadcasting a variety of news, information and entertainment programs each day.

The Missouri Broadcasters Association was formed August 15, 1948, in Kansas City. Missouri was the second state to have a full-time broadcast association. North Carolina's association was formed earlier that same year. From its offices in Jefferson City, the MBA works for the broadcasters of Missouri, as well as allied organizations, to provide a variety of services.

The MBA is governed by a four-person executive committee and a eight-person board of directors representing radio and television broadcasters. Board members are elected for two-year terms and may seek re-election for one additional term. In addition, there are four standing committees, each responsible for a specific area of service. There are a total of 42 members serving on these committees. The committees have three roles: to represent member interests in state and federal legislative and regulatory process; maintain the MBA office as a resource center for training, revenue expansion, cost control and information; and encourage the highest standards in broadcasting.

Since 1968, the Missouri Broadcasters Association has maintained a communications center on the first floor of the State Capitol. These facilities are available to radio and television broadcasters to aid in their coverage of state news. These facilities are also available to state officials and legislators for the recording of information to be sent to radio and television stations in Missouri. Currently, plans are being made to update this facility with the latest technology to better serve these purposes.

Academy of Missouri Squires

An organization unique among the states, the Academy of Missouri Squires was founded in the fall of 1960 by Governor James T. Blair Jr., who established it with a ceiling of 100 members. Governor Blair's purpose was to establish an organization to honor Missourians for their accomplishments at all levels—community, state or nation.

Governor Blair appointed the first class of 10 Squires, after consulting leaders in every section of the state. Each succeeding class has been elected by the membership of the Academy, after receiving nominations from the public as well as from the membership of the Academy. The governor and former governors of Missouri are automatically members.

Squires are listed by class. Present addresses are noted in parentheses when different from address at time of election.

Foreign Consulates in Missouri

Consulates are the offices established by countries for their representatives (consuls) living in certain foreign cities and serving the country's citizens and business interests there. The Missouri Consular Corps is compromised of foreign service officers from nations maintaining friendly relations with the United States. These officials, recognized by the U.S. State Department, are headquartered in Kansas City and St. Louis. They perform trade and diplomatic services for their own citizens and for United States citizens.

Key: CE—Consul Emeritus; HC—Honorary Consul; C—Consul; HVC—Honorary Vice Consul; HCG—Honorary Consul General; HCA—Honorary Consular Agent.

The Non-Teacher School Employee Retirement System of Missouri began operations in 1965. It includes 62,641 active employees and 14,270 retirees of public school districts, except those in St. Louis and Kansas City. The Missouri Consolidated Health Care Plan (MCHCP) was created through legislation passed in May 1992 transferring the administration of the health care program for most of the State's employees and retirees from the Missouri State Employees' Retirement System (MOSERS) to MCHCP. MCHCP officially began operation on January 1, 1994. The legislation also allowed other non-state public entities to join MCHCP. MCHCP began providing access to health insurance for public entities as of January 1995. Types of public entities qualifying for MCHCP coverage include cities, counties, and school districts. MCHCP provides coverage for over 108,000 state and public entity members, retirees and their dependents offering various types of health insurance plans, including health maintenance organization (HMO), point of service (POS) and preferred provider organization (PPO) plans.

The Missouri Consolidated Health Care Plan is governed by a thirteen member board including: the director of the Department of Insurance, director of the Department of Health, commissioner of the Office of Administration, two representatives from the House of Representatives, two representatives from the Senate and six members appointed by the governor. Three of the six members are not members of MCHCP. The remaining three members are members of the plan either as a state or public entity member.

The system is responsible for administration of the retirement program for all state employees (other than employees of the Highway Commission, the Highway Patrol and the University of Missouri). Effective Sept. 1, 1972, the program became noncontributory for members with the state becoming the sole contributor. The system also provides life insurance coverage of one times annual pay for active members and $5,000 for retired members, with optional group life insurance coverage available at the expense of the members. The system is also responsible for administration of the state's long-term disability program for most state employees.

The system operates under the direction and control of an 11-member board of trustees made up of the state treasurer, commissioner of administration, two members each of the House and Senate, two members appointed by the governor, two active members elected by the active members and one retired member elected by the retired members.

Flag Etiquette

The following are some of the rules of flag etiquette regarding the time and manner of display and disposal of the flag of the United States of America pursuant to Title 4, Chapter 1 of the United States Code.

• It is the universal custom to display the flag only from sunrise to sunset on buildings and on stationary flagstaffs in the open. However, when a patriotic effect is desired, the flag may be displayed 24 hours a day if properly illuminated during the hours of darkness.

• No other flag or pennant should be placed above or, if on the same level, to the right of the flag of the United States of America, except during church services conducted by naval chaplains at sea, when the church pennant may be flown above the flag during services for the personnel of the Navy.

• No person shall display the flag of the United Nations or any other national or international flag equal, above, or in a position of superior prominence or honor to, or in place of, the flag of the United States at any place within the United States or any Territory or possession thereof; Provided, That nothing in this section shall make unlawful the continuance of the practice heretofore followed of displaying the flag of the United Nations in a position of superior prominence or honor, and other national flags in positions of equal prominence or honor, with that of the flag of the United States at the headquarters of the United Nations.

• When flags of States, cities, or localities, or pennants of societies are flown on the same halyard with the flag of the United States, the latter should always be at the peak. When the flags are flown from adjacent staffs, the flag of the United States should be hoisted first and lowered last. No such flag or pennant may be placed above the flag of the United States or to the United States flag's right.

• The flag of the United States of America, when it is displayed with another flag against a wall from crossed staffs, should be on the right, the flag's own right, and its staff should be in front of the staff of the other flag.

• The flag of the United States of America should be at the center and at the highest point of the group when a number of flags of States or localities or pennants of societies are grouped and displayed from staffs.

• When the flags of two or more nations are displayed, they are to be flown from separate staffs of the same height. The flags are to be of approximately equal size. International usage forbids the display of the flag of one nation above that of another nation in time of peace.

• When displayed either horizontally or vertically against a wall, the union should be uppermost and to the flag's own right, that is, to the observer's left. When displayed in a window, the flag should be displayed in the same way, with the union or blue field to the left of the observer in the street.

• When used on a speaker's platform, the flag if displayed flat, should be displayed above and behind the speaker. When displayed from a staff in a church or public auditorium, the flag of the United States of America should hold the position of superior prominence, in advance of the audience, and in the position of honor at the clergyman's or speaker's right as he faces the audience. Any other flag so displayed should be placed on the left of the clergyman or speaker or to the right of the audience.

• The flag, when flown at half-staff, should be hoisted to the peak for an instant and then lowered to the half-staff position. On Memorial Day the flag should be displayed at half-staff until noon only, then raised to the top of the staff. By order of the President, the flag should be flown at half-staff upon the death of principal figures of the United States Government and the Governor of a State, Territory, or possession, as a mark of respect to their memory. In the event of the death of other officials or foreign dignitaries, the flag is to be displayed at half-staff according to Presidential instructions or orders, or in accordance with recognized customs or practices not inconsistent with law.

• In the event of the death of a present or former official of the government of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, The Governor of the State, Territory, or possession may proclaim that the National flag shall be flown at half-staff.

• The flag should be hoisted briskly and lowered ceremoniously.

• The flag should be displayed in or near every polling place on election days.

• The flag should be displayed during school days in or near every schoolhouse.

• The flag, when it is such that it is no longer a fitting emblem for display, should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning.

The Pledge of Allegiance

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.
